Dr. Dix's Terrible Arraignment.

From the New York World.

Dr. Morgan Dix made "society" the topic of his last Lenten sermon. He asked: "What is our society? It has almost ceased to have a national tone; the old American life and ways are overlaid and hidden; this is the land to which enormous delegates from other lands migrate; it seems a great assemblage, a conglomerate of many and strongly contrasted civilizations. Nowhere has there ever been a better field for the devil's double propaganda, and all about us are the signs of activity. True, there are checks which still restrain the evil, but each day some barrier gives way. To keep to the straight and narrow path of settled principles and living and purity of heart is harder now for our young people than it was a quarter of a century ago, because a false sentiment, widely influential, condones their excesses, and even approves of their misdoings.

"It would be painful to inquire what kind of life is developed under the influences thus at work for the public ruin—to gauge with the line and plummet of God's word and law the demoralization of society. For some of this there may be excuse. For example, think how the lowest classes live—in tenements, crowded together in such wise that decency is impossible; that children cannot be brought up like Christians, that young men and women can hardly, by any chance, be kept honest, chaste and pure. But what shall be said of the higher classes—for those whose sins are without justification, and denote simply carelessness, irreligion and unbelief? Consider how young girls are trained, in softness and luxury, with the one idea of making a figure in society and a brilliant marriage; of making the most of their physical advantages, and alluring the other sex by the arts best adapted to that purpose. See them on the drive through the troubled social sea; at their lunch parties, with a dozen courses and half as many kinds of wines; at the opera, immodestly attired; at the ball, giving the whole night to dissipation; at the summer haunts of fashion without due oversight or sense of responsibility, treated with easy familiarity by careless men, and apparently without a vestige of an idea of what is due to a gentlewoman from a man.

"Then pass on, and let us look at the woman as married—married, perhaps, for her money, or marrying some man for his money, without love and without respect; married, but with no idea of living thereafter under bonds; resolved to be more free and to enjoy life more; eager for admiration, athirst for compliments and flattery, so that the husband early drops into a secondary position, and some other man, who does the madly devoted for the time, engrosses the larger share of her thoughts. Follow out this subject till you come to the divorce suit and the separation, and thence to the next, and now adulterous marriage, when those whom Christ and the Gospel forbid to marry, so long as some one else liveth, snap their fingers at the attempted restriction, and commence a second partnership without fear and without re-made welcome; flirtations going on between persons, each of whom has plighted troth to someone else, and others languishing after the wives of other men, and married men running after young girls and paying them attentions, with the devil's look in the eyes and the devil's thoughts in the heart, and women, young and old, permitting these demonstrations, entertained and flattered by them, and glad to find themselves still able to make conquests."

A prominent society lady in New York cannot go to sleep without putting her thumb in her mouth. She has tried in vain to cure herself of the habit. She got it in childhood and has kept it in mature years in spite of many attempts at a cure.

A Cincinnati man, whose favorite driving mare fell sick, turned her out to pasture among a lot of mules. While she lay, too feeble to care what was going on, they ate her mane and tail off as thoroughly as a barber could have cut them. The mare can still trot in 2.30, but she looks queer.
