The lack of which can worry a woman so much—can be sent to you by Miss Harriet Knight, at Hochschild, Kohn & Co.'s, if you will write to her and tell her what you need.

Hairnets, a veil, hairpins, a white organdy or lace collar for a dark dress, thread, embroidery cotton or silk, knitting wool, a pattern, samples of materials and laces, stockings, corset laces and shoe laces, a time-saving kitchen utensil—every woman knows the hour of need of such articles as these—and knows the worry the lack of them can bring to her.

In the "little things" as well as the more important shopping problems that each recurring season brings—Miss Knight is at your service. If she cannot find what you want here, she will procure it for you as promptly as possible.

SEPTEMBER CHICKS—KEEP THE LAYING HEN—OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

Our experience with September hatched chicks—and it is very meagre—gives us the belief that they are not profitable and, with the present standard of high prices, it does not pay to hatch them. But others think otherwise, and the object of this brief article is to give the other fellow's side of the argument. Postmaster Thos. D. Bowers is a firm believer in September-hatched chicks and don't rear any other kind. In fact, he says, that he has made more profit from his September chicks of last year than any that he has ever raised. He says they are less trouble, grower faster and stay out of molt for a longer period. Mrs. G. M. Walsh, of Oklahoma, is another firm believer in September hatched chicks and in the American Poultry Journal of this month writes an interesting article of how she began raising September chicks until now she believes in nothing else. Our objections to it are these: September hatched chicks, with everything favorable, would begin laying about February or March, at the very time when the lowest market of the year prevails, consequently a person loses all the valuable high-price months of the business which he would benefit by had he hatched his chicks out in February or March. Then the broilers from September hatched chicks would be right for marketing about December resulting in the birds coming in on a low price market, where, on the other hand, had the same person hatched his chickens in February or March he would have broilers to sell in April or May, when the chickens are worth about twice as much. September chicks may be a curiosity in the fall, but we have our doubts if they will pull much money in the pocket-book.

Mr. Argos Robinson, of the Kent County Savings Bank force, is one of our Chetsertown chicken raisers who is making good. Mr. Robinson raises buff rocks and finds them profitable and interesting. He has had quite a few caponized, with the result that they have grown considerable. Personally, we fail to see where caponizing pays. For instance, take a two pound chicken in May and he is worth about $1.00. Caponize him and keep him for five months more and he will cost you at least $1 for his keep during this extra period. Out of a dozen capons you are likely to lose several in a five-month period, besides you may lose some in the operation. Then the question is: Would it not be more profitable to sell your two-pound bird at $1, instead of taking the risk of caponizing him, and then keeping him for five or six months more? We believe it would pay to sell him for above named price.

The following recommendations are from the Agricultural Experiment Station, University of Wisconsin, and should be read by all our Kent County poultry raisers:

CULLS

1. Poor layers and all old hens.
2. Cripples and hens with broken down abdomens or frozen toes.
3. The sick, quiet, inactive hens that spend some time on the roost.
4. All "crow heads," with long, slim heads and beaks.
5. The large, coarse-headed hens with sunken eyes.
6. All very short, stubby hens with feathers extremely heavy for their breed.
7. All late-hatched immature pullets and those that are early hatched but undersized.
8. All hens that molt before Aug. 1.
9. The persistent sitter.
10. All hens with solid fat abdomens.
11. All hens having bad habits (canibals, feather-pullers, egg eaters).
12. All cockerels not needed for breeding purposes.

KEEP

1. Strong, healthy, vigorous hens with short, neat heads and strong beaks.
2. The hens with long, deep, rectangular bodies and parallel top and bottom lines.
3. The hens with large, bright eyes, active appearance and short, well-worn toe nails.
4. The hens with dusty, worn feathers, especially worn tail feathers, but having a bright, healthy look.
5. The hens that molt late.
6. The noisy, happy, friendly hens.
7. The early risers and those late to roost.
8. The vigorous hens with faded beaks and shanks.
9. The hens with the soft, pliable abdomens.
10. The hens with the thin pelvic bones spread wide apart.
11. The early-hatched, well-grown pullets.
12. Large, strong, active, quick maturing cockerels of desired variety, type and high-producing mothers.

Lice are the common parasite that infest poultry. The hen louse has biting mouth parts and it lives on the feathers and scales of the skin. It crawls on men and other animals, but will not stay there. It's home is the hen. The eggs of lice are deposited and attached to the fluff or under part of the feather. They are often seen when the feathers of the fluff are examined. A hen that becomes fat and inactive usually falls prey to lice because she does not wallow and dust herself sufficiently. If her fluff feathers are matted with nits or eggs, these will hatch in 6 to 10 days. It is well at this time of the year to thoroughly dust hens with lice powder so as to free them of body lice before their new plumage is grown. With a few birds it is quite an easy matter to catch them and dust them with commercial lice powder, but with big flocks this is almost impossible, consequently they are compelled to let the hens dust themselves in dust boxes and the like, and at the same time keep the houses as clean as possible.

Kent Boys Win—Both Calf Club boys from Kent won premiums at Timonium Fair. Norman Pennington, son of Edgar R. Pennington, of near Kennedyville, won blue ribbon first prizes of $40 on his Holstein heifer. He was also presented with $25 for winning first place by Mr. L. E. Lambert, president of Holstein Friesian Association of Maryland. William Urie, son of Dr. J. W. Urie, of Kennedyville, won 6th place and money prize of $25 on his Guernsey heifer amid keen competition from other counties.
