COUNTY AGENT'S NOTES

SOY BEANS

Very few soy beans were grown in Kent County two years ago. The farmers, however, are awakening to the fact that it is a good crop for several reasons and I believe there are more soy beans being harvested for hay and seed and being turned under this year than ever before in Kent County. Good, let's have more next year.

Soy beans have a blooming period which extends over several weeks. When soy beans are to be harvested for hay they should be mowed when nearly finished blooming, when the first pods and seeds are fairly well developed and before the leaves have turned yellow. This will give the maximum yield of high quality hay.

The common hay implements are used in handling the hay crop. The hay should be allowed to wilt in the swath and cure for a day or more in wind rows, after which it should be placed in cocks. If the weather has been favorable it usually is ready to go to the barn three or four days after cutting.

Where the crop is to be used for seed, a grain binder is used for harvesting the same as with wheat. The crop should be cut when practically all of the seed pods have ripened and the leaves have dropped from the plants. Usually, about two weeks are necessary for the beans to cure in the shocks. By reducing the cylinders' speed of the thresher to about 600 revolutions per minute and by substituting blank concaves, practically no loss from split beans is sustained. If the soy beans are to be ground and fed to dairy cattle the threshing may be done without any regard to the amount of seed broken in the threshing. Where only a small amount is to be threshed for home seed supply, the beans can be threshed out with a flail.

It is suggested that farmers interested in this crop look upon the roots of soy bean plants at this time for nodules containing nitrogen. The very small cost of inoculating soy beans is an investment that pays big returns. If you want to see a large number of nodules on the roots of this plant just drop in the County Agent's office.

HOG CHOLERA

Several farms in the vicinity of Chestertown have hog cholera on their premises. To prevent further spreading of this disease practically all of these farms have been visited by the County Agent and Dr. W. H. Wright, Veterinary Inspector, to make sure that all dead animals were being promptly and properly buried and to assist the farmers in any way possible. Every farmer should do all he can to prevent further outbreaks of this disease which would cause heavy losses. In this connection, the farmers of Kent County are requested to bury all dead carcasses immediately and with three feet of dirt above them, according to the law of Maryland. All farmers in the vicinity of hog cholera cases are advised to have their hogs vaccinated at once.
