THE TRANSCRIPT

TODAY, SATURDAY, is Lindbergh day in Washington, where this American air hero will be greeted by one of, if not the largest crowds ever assembled in Washington, after having showered on him in Europe by crownheads honors after honors, all which he was justly entitled to. His accomplishment was one of daring adventure.

THE Maryland Editorial Association was most pleasantly entertained at a luncheon at the Belvedere Hotel, Baltimore last Saturday by the Baltimore American and the Baltimore News. Mr. Cullen, representing the Hearst papers made a most deligtfulhost, and made the country editors feel very much at home by his pleasing manner. A business meeting of the association preceded the luncheon. It was agreed at the meeting that the summer social gathering of the editors be held at Rehobeth, and Mr. Charles Walls editor of the Centreville Observer and the Del-Mar-Va. press association make the necessary arrangements for the summer outing.

MANY STUDENTS from the various colleges and public schools are being graduated at this time and the problem of what avocation in life to pursue now confronts them. Some no doubt have chosen their life work and have taken the studies that best fits them for those duties, while others are simply drifting and waiting for "something to turn up." Opportunities await many of them at or near their homes if they are willing to grasp these opportunities and work intelligently and industriously to promote and advance them. The general tendencies are to the over crowded cities where in must cases they are lost sight of. The country needs young men and young women and it is to be hoped that those leaving our educational institutions will remain in the rural sections and help to develop them in an intelligent way.

One of the aims of the Association is to get the parents to bring their children to the various clinics that are held throughout the county, where children are examined free of charge and recommendations are made for the proper care of those ho are affected with different diseases.
