WASHINGTON BEATS ST. JOHNS

The football game on Saturday last when Washington College won over St. Johns can well be termed one of the most interesting contests held in Chestertown for many years.

While foot ball material can well be called the outstanding quality necessary to develop a winning team, yet Saturdays game showed that intensive training and determination to win is the thing that can bring a weaker team out in front.

All sport writers picked St. Johns to win but coaches Kibler and Brown determined to give them a good battle.

Pep meetings were held which increased the determination of every student as well as the foot ball team that St. Johns should not pass. They didn't pass and Washington out played their opponents in almost every quarter.

It was a glorious day for the college, even the bleechers sacrificed themselves to the ravages of fire in order to celebrate the victory. These bleechers have seen many foot ball games but when Washington beat St. Johns in 1927 they probably felt that one game represented a life time of usefulness and they died a Martyr to celebration. The Chestertown fire company, witnessing the great sacrifice poured cooling water on the burning sores. They are no more but they died a glorious death. Detail of game on page 2.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

To remove chewing gum from a washable dress, soften the stain with egg white and then wash.

Spices and seasonings do not supply the body with building material or energy but they are important as appetizers.

A wire dish drainer is a great time saver. Hot water can be poured over the china, and only the silver and glasses need be dried.

Farmers' Bulletin 1530, "Fitting Dresses and Blouses" is just what you need when you begin your fall sewing. It may be had for the asking.

Children should be taught to eat the crusts of bread and rolls for the sake of their teeth. They should be cautioned, too, to chew their food thoroughly.

Panned summer squash is fine. Cut the squash in quarter inch slices, flour them, and brown in butter in a heavy skillet until they are tender and a deep gold in color.

Instead of rubbing it through a colander, try putting the fresh pumpkin through a food chopper. Then it cooks quickly and time and fuel are saved.

To test samples of fabric for fastness to light, cover one-half with cardboard and expose the rest to direct sunlight for ten days. To test for fastness in laundering, wash and dry half your sample under ordinary conditions. Curtain material should be tested in these ways before purchasing, and dress goods when possible.

Have you a rest corner in your kitchen? Near a window with a pleasant view put a small table where you can write up accounts or menus, sort housekeeping papers, or prepare your grocery order. Have a comfortable chair here, and some sort of a rack or shelf for cookbooks and such household magazines as may be glanced at while something in cooking. If space permits the darning bag or any other pick-up sewing may be kept handy here, too. The table should have a small drawer if possible where the housekeeping purse may be accessible but out of sight.

HEALTH NOTES

THE SOAP AND WATER DRILL

"Soap and water, frequently used, are two of the best allies we have in our fight against many of the catching diseases," was the answer of Dr. R. H. Riley, Assistant Director of the State Department of Health, when asked to suggest some ways that would help to prevent the interchange of the germs of diseases among children in the schools.

"If we could get every child to form the habit of washing the hands thoroughly, several times a day, and certainly before meals, it would go a long way," he continued, "toward cutting down some of the diseases that children catch from each other at school. The teachers who are having soap and water drills are rendering a genuine service. The teacher of a one room school worked out a plan recently, with the local public health nurse that is worth being copied elsewhere.

"That particular school is without the conveniences that make cleanliness easy. Water has to be brought from a pump some distant away and there is no washroom in the building. The teacher aroused the interest of the children by asking each one to bring some left over bits of soap. Boiling water poured over the lot turned it into liquid soap which was poured into a bottle fitted with a shaker top. A pitcher, a bucket, some Japanese paper napkins and a package of wooden toothpicks completed the equipment.

"The hand scrub drill takes place just before the children eat their lunch. Appointment on the soap and water serving squad is a reward of merit and cleanliness. The empty bucket to hold waste water is put in place and the children line up. (Incidentally, it is worth noting that the plan of pouring water over the hands is preferable to the use of basins because of the difficulty of keeping 'group basins' sterile.)

HORSE RACING AND HOG RAISING

Horse racing is the sport of Kings and those of more common clay who delight in pitting their judgment against the laws of chance. Mathematics have nothing to do with doping out a winner in a horse race. The dear lady who picks out the horses because they have such sweet names, is usually more successful than the chap who burns the midnight oil figuring out the past performances. While horse racing may not provide the speed thrills that automobile racing does, yet it is not a slow sport when it comes to extrating the shekels from the old sock. Somehow our judgment on horses always goes awry. Our choice seems to have the faculty of burning out a bearing or breaking a drive shaft about the time we are mentally spending our winnings. Or else the jockey suffers from a sudden attack of loss of memory and momentarily forgets that he is in the race for the ostensible purpose of winning. Such misfortunes are liable to occur occasionally in he lives of all of us but when they turn up consistently, one is forced to believe it too costly a procedure to maintain an opinion on the relative chances of any piece of horse flesh.

When it comes to plunging, however, the chap who follows the ponies is a piker in comparison with some farmers and swine raisers we have met. While statistics show that 90% of the primary outbreaks of hog cholera in Maryland is due to feeding bones or trimmings of market pork, some of these folk still continue to gamble away their crop by feeding such a product. Over 75% of the hog cholera in Maryland each year occurs between the first of August and the first of December. The reason for this is that these four months comprise the period of the year when the majoriy of farmers are buying pork. As soon as the weather becomes sufficiently cold or home butchering, the number of cholera outbreaks rapidly declines. If scraps of this market pork were kept away from the hogs on the farms, there would be a decided reduction in the number of cholera outbreaks.
