PRESERVING THE FROG.

If, in seeking a horse, we take up the foot and find the frog well-preserved; the cushion, so to speak, wide, full and soft, the probability is that the remainder of the foot will be in good order. There may be an exception to this in the case of a used-up horse having been turned out to pasture for a period long enough to permit the frog to take on new growth. If the frog be fully protected and well maintained, the hoof will be found but little, if at all contracted, for the very good reason that the hoof cannot readily contract if the frog be up to its normal size in every way. But it is the smith, the horse shoer, who ruins the frog; that is, very many of them do this. During the many years that the writer has driven horses, he has always made it a rule to be present during the shoeing, and has never permitted more than the slightest trimming of the frog, nothing more than the trimming off of insignificant parts, already nearly detached. The smith can mutilate and seriously damage the hoof by the use of the rasp; but, fortunately, the frog is proof against attacks by this instrument, and even the knife requires to be sharp, else the peculiar nature of the frog will resist. Fever in the feet is a prolific source of injury to the frog, and should be overcome at the earliest possible day. Confinement upon a dry, plank floor is damaging by keeping up too complete a state of dryness. Cutting the frog away at the time of shoeing, then setting the foot upon caulkins, in such manner as to prevent the frog from pressing upon the ground, will, sooner or later, interfere with its development and usefulness. The most important function of the frog is to lesson the shock to the foot in its contact with the ground. This being the fact, it should be so maintained, and the shoe be so constructed that at every step the frog can come in for a fair share of the pressure upon whatever substance the horse is required to tread.

Any odd pieces of silver may be utilized, if for plating metallic articles, by placing them in an ounce of nitric acid, boiling them for an instant. The acid having dissolved the silver, throw in a good handful of common salt to kill the acid, then make into a paste with common whiting. The paste is to be applied with wash leather dampened in water. The silver surface will be maintained for years.

As illustrating the part that labor plays in enhancing the value of raw materials, it is estimated that from seventy-five cents' worth of iron ore may be developed $5.50 worth of bar iron, $10 worth of horse shoes, $180 worth of table knives, $6,800 worth of fine needles, $29,470 worth of shirt buttons, $200,000 worth of watch springs, or $2,500,000 worth of pallet arbors (used in watches.)

There is nothing more highly relished by hogs than charcoal. They will help themselves to it, and it will prevent disorders of the bowels. The best mode of giving it is when it is fresh, and if placed in a fire and heated occasionally it will be more serviceable. It corrects the acidity of the stomach, and as it is cheap a supply should be kept constantly in each pen.

It will probably surprise most people to learn that both cessation of respiration and of movement of the heart are rejected as signs of death by a French lecturer, in considering the precise moment when life ceases. Heart-beats have been known to continue for an hour after the body was beheaded, while, on the other hand, they may temporarily cease in fainting.

In England, a fashionable fabric called "imitation Indian muslin" has been found to be so highly charged with arsenic as to render it dangerous to health and life when used either for dresses or other attire, or for curtains. Several seamstresses have been made very ill by working upon it.

Among recent achievements in photography is a portrait copy taken by the light of a Cuban fire-beetle in thirty seconds, and a photograph of the aurora borealis. To obtain the latter had been declared an utter impossibility.

It is all well enough to talk about a needle being lost in a haystack, but it would not be lost long if you ever walk on the hay in your bare feet.

It is not the hand that rocks the cradle, but the hand that never had an opportunity to rock the cradle, that wants to rule the country.

Fresh lard is recommended as a remedy for warts on horses. Three applications, it is claimed, will cure any case.
