War Ships Ordered to Hayti.

The Republic of Hayti is the scene of constant revolution. The people have not learned to submit to the will of the majority constitutionally expressed. The President recently elected was never permitted to assume his lawful authority. Gen. Legitime revolted and the legally elected President fled. Legitime assumed the reins of government and declared a blockade. The American steamer Haytien Republic, approaching one of the ports of the country in ignorance of the proclamation, was seized and is now held by the usurping authorities of Hayti. What correspondence has passed between the State Department at Washington and the government of Hayti concerning the matter has not been made public, but the steamer has not been released nor her owners indemnified for her illegal detention. In this emergency Admiral Luce has been dispatched with the United States Steamers Galena and Yantic, to bring the recalcitrant Legitime and his usurping backers to a sense of propriety. This is all right; but curious people may wonder why a similar course has not been pursued towards our more powerful neighbors of Canada, in some of the many outrages perpetrated upon American vessels by the Navy of the Dominion. Doubtless Hayti will speedily succumb to the menace of the little American fleet, and an engagement with the Haytian Navy is not among the probabilities. Should resistance be made to the just demands of the United States, however, a little speck of war may appear on the horizon. A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, who interviewed Admiral Luce on Tuesday, reports him as saying:

"I sail for Hayti to-morrow on the Galena, and will be accompanied by the Yantic. Mr. Morse, an owner of the seized steamer Haytien Republic, will go out as a guest and to facilitate his business in connection with his steamer. I do not think I will enter the harbor of Port au Prince with both vessels, as it is more than possible I shall send the Yantic to Port au Plata, on the north side of the island, which is the stronghold of the insurrectionary forces, or we may touch there together. I cannot, of course, say what will be done when we arrive, but if the Haytien Republic is there and not surrendered upon demand, we will proceed to take her. If the Haytian fleet is there and shows fight, we will measure supremacy with them. I do not anticipate trouble, and I think the seized steamship will turn up in New York shortly. I learn the owners will send a crew for her on the steamer to sail from here on Saturday for Port au Prince. In Regard to the Richmond, she may follow me in a week, as Admiral Gherardi told me to-day, she would be ready for sea in four days."

The Senate Tariff Bill.

The Senate evidently intends to perfect and pass its tariff bill, offered as a substitute, during the last session, to the Mills bill. The Democrats endeavored, very zealously, to create the impression that its introduction was designed only to affect the result of the Presidential election, and that, having fulfilled its mission, it would be allowed to sleep to the end of the 50th Congress. The Republicans insisted that it was a bona fide measure, requiring further amendment and adjustment, in detail, but in the main outlining the views and purposes of the party on the tariff question; that it was offered in good faith and would be pressed to its passage. The proceedings of the Senate indicate that this was the correct view of the matter. The bill is undergoing consideration in open session and it is perfectly plain that the Republican Senators are in practical accord in regard to it. It may be some time before a vote is reached, but the country can be assured that the Republican party, now charged with the responsibility of legislation and administration, will pass such a tariff measure as will afford all necessary reduction in revenue and at the same time provide ample protection to American industries and labor.

Thomas N. Hart, Republican, was elected Mayor of Boston on Tuesday, over Hugh O'Brien, by about 1700 majority. O'Brien was a candidate for reelection. He was regarded as an upright man and his administration had been a fair, but extremely partisan one. The Republicans also elected a majority of the school-committee men, the election turning on the use of a particular history in the schools, which was opposed by the Catholics, not one of whom was elected although eight of that denomination hold over. The Board consists of twenty members. Many women registered and voted on the school question.

Resolutions have been introduced in the Board of School Commissioners of Baltimore to provide a more permanent tenure for the teachers of the public schools. The proposition is commendable and right, but it is somewhat singular that it never occurred to the School authorities to inaugurate the movement until the possibility of Republican ascendency in the city became manifest. The teachers now employed have, as a rule, Democratic affiliations and were appointed through political influence.

The President has nominated to the Senate for appointment as Collector of Internal revenue for the district of Maryland, Hon. Andrew G. Chapman, of St. Mary's county. Mr. Chapman was chief deputy under Collector Roberts. If the Senate should fail to act upon the nomination a vacancy would occur at the expiration of the present Congress, and be filled by President Harrison.

The direct tax bill passed the House of Representatives on Wednesday and now goes to the President for his signature. It is rumored that it may meet with a veto, and will fail of the two-thirds vote in the House to enact it into law. The bill refunds to the States the money collected by direct tax in 1861, and provides that it shall be returned, by the States, to those who paid it.

A Terrible Lesson to Lynchers.

A little after 12 o'clock on Sunday morning last a mob of 3,000 men approached the jail of Birmingham, Alabama, with the avowed purpose of lynching R. R. Hawes, who was incarcerated on the charge of having murdered his wife and child. The sheriff, whose name is Smith, was prepared for their coming. The various approaches to the jail were closely guarded by resolute and determined men. The sheriff resolved to protect his prisoners at all hazards. With him was the Chief of Police, Pickard, and the men were armed with Winchester rifles and a Gatling gun. An alleyway led to the jail and the men had orders to prevent the mob from entering it. With the lynchers, and using their best endeavors to prevent an attack on the jail, were a number of prominent citizens; but the mob pressed on, and after repeated warnings were given by Sheriff Smith, he gave the order to fire, and the deadly Gatling sent a hail of bullets into the dense mass of human beings, killing ten and wounding many more. Among the killed is M. B. Thockmorton, postmaster of Birmingham. Of course there is great excitement in Birmingham, and Sheriff Smith is locked up on a charge of murder. Hawes, the party against whom the lynchers were proceeding, was just married to a young girl, his former wife and their child having disappeared. He claims to be innocent of the crime, but the facts are strong against him. The story of the murder, as told in a dispatch from Birmingham, on Sunday last, are about as follows:

"The past week has been a season of sensation in Birmingham. On Tuesday morning the body of May Hawes, a 14-year-old girl, was taken from the waters of East Lake. On Wednesday the remains were identified, and the father, R. R. Hawes, was arrested charged with the murder of his child. On Thursday and Friday the Coroner's inquest developed some very sensational facts and lynching was freely talked of. Yesterday the dead body of Mrs. Hawes was found in the bottom of the lake at Lake View. About two hundred pounds of lead had been fastened to the body to hold it under the water. The woman's skull had been evidently crushed in with an axe. As the body lay upon the bank the crowd of curious and indignant spectators was momentarily increased until it swelled into a surging multitude. The feeling of rage increased with each moment until it threatened to become a frenzy. Fierce threats of vengeance were heard. The woman's skin had been wrinkled and bleached by the water, and it is evident that she had been under water for several days. Shortly before the body of the woman was dragged from the lake another party searching around the house found secretly hid beneath the front door steps a tightly wrapped bundle of bloody clothes about the size of those worn by the child. They were evidently worn by the little one when she was so cruelly murdered. The evidence against Hawes is complete. He killed his wife and two children and married a young girl all within a week."

Since the above was put in type Sheriff Smith has been released on bail in the sum of $25,000, and has returned to his official duties. The Governor of the State approves his action and good citizens, everywhere, while deploring the terrible effect of his order to fire upon the mob, believe it will have a salutary effect in restraining the lynching spirit and relegating to the lawful authorities where it properly belongs, the punishment of crimes against the State.

The jury of inquest has rendered a verdict that R. R. Hawes is guilty of the murder of his wife and child. The verdict also implicated two other persons in the crime.

A Force in National Politics.

There was hard fighting all along the line in the Republican campaign for the Presidency this year; but we think it can safely be said that in the contest of ideas and popular education which has just ended, The New York Tribune fairly surpassed all competitors on the Republican side in the originality, force, and success of its work in behalf of the national ticket. The Tribune did not make a mistake. Every blow it struck made clearer to men of both parties the absolute impregnability of the Republican position. It certainly set people to thinking, by its broadsides on civil service reform, the tariff, the discriminations of the Cleveland Administration against Union soldiers, its revelation of the drift of wage-earners away from the free trade party, its admirable work for the farmers and for temperance, and the persistency with which it claimed and proved that England desires the defeat of Protection in America. Over 2,300,000 copies of The Tribune's political leaflets were circulated during the campaign. If to any Republican newspaper must be awarded the merit of leadership, we doubt if there is one which will contest it with The Tribune. The paper has proved itself anew to be a practical force in national affairs, as well as a devoted champion of Republican ideas. It must not be supposed from this that the Tribune is only a political paper. It is really one of the best news and family papers in the country and whoever wants a journal that is thoroughly reliable in every respect can make no mistake by subscribing for it. For readers who want a national newspaper, in addition to their home journal (and every one does now), there is none more worthy their perusal than The Tribune. The prospectus of that paper is printed by us to day. New subscribers to the Weekly and Semi-Weekly get the paper until January 1, 1890. Among the premiums offered this year are the Waverly Novels, The Tribune's excellent "Book of Open-Air Sports," Cooper's Leather Stocking, a variety of standard dollar books, a good shot gun, a good rifle and a few other articles of standard value. The "Open-Air Sports" book is a fine holiday gift.

Judge Cowing, of the New York Court of General Sessions, on Thursday sentenced John Lewis, a colored man, to be hanged on February 1. Lewis was convicted lately of murder in the first degree, in shooting and killing his mistress, Alice Jackson.

Vice-President elect Morton and Mrs. Morton are visiting Gen. and Mrs. Harrison, at Indianapolis. The visit, it is said, has no political significance whatever, being purely of a social nature.

A Battle With Dredgers.

The steamer Governor McLane has had a fight with dredgers. It occurred on Monday night in Chester river. The McLane is commanded by Capt. Thos. B. C. Howard, who has shown both pluck and energy in dealing with the law-breaking captains who have been plundering and destroying the oyster beds in Maryland waters. The people of Maryland, and especially of the tide water counties, had grown hopeless of any protection against the pirates at the hands of the expensive and apparently worthless oyster police navy of the State, and were turning their eyes towards the general government as a last resort, in the dangerous emergency. It is said that upwards of two hundred thousand bushels of oysters have been illegally taken, the present season, by the dredgers. But this vast bulk of the bivalves, great as it is, represents but a tithe of the injury inflicted on the oyster interest. The dredgers tear up and destroy the beds, taking away the large and small oysters alike, leaving none for future growth and propagation. The law forbids them taking oysters in the rivers at all, and confines them to the oyster beds outside of certain limits in the bay; but they have defied the law with impunity, and few of them have suffered capture. Always bold, they seem to have grown utterly reckless the present season, and have formed combinations into fleets for their mutual protection in wrong-doing. Two of the State constabulary fleet have been roughly handled by them, the Groome and the Hayward, and last week they attacked a steamer on the Chester river, carrying freight and passengers, and riddled her with bullets, probably supposing that she belonged to the police fleet.

Finally the daily press, and particularly the Morning Herald, took up the matter and ventilated it thoroughly, showing the inefficiency and inexperience of the commander of the fleet and the apparently helpless condition of the force against the combined strength of the pirates. This good work shows fruit, already, in the McLane's gallant fight. Two of the dredging vessels were sunk, and it is apprehended some members of their crews were drowned. They poured an unceasing fire of bullets into the McLane, wounding one man severely, while others narrowly escaped. The wonder is that many were not struck, as even the cooking utensils in the kitchen were perforated. It is said that two of the dredgers were killed by the fire of the McLane.

Capt. Howard, of the McLane, gives the following account of the battle: "About 7.35 P. M. Monday I steamed into Chester river and saw a large fleet of boats at work. I directed my steamers toward them and when in hailing distance called for them to down jibs. Hardly had I given the order when to my surprise I was greeted with a volley of balls. The firing seemed to be almost instantaneous and the bullets struck the McLane like a solid shot and for more than an hour there was one continuous shower of bullets and shot.

"I saw that some desperate means must be adopted. I singled out several boats, and as I started for them noticed a solid fleet of nine boats, all of which were tied together, and from the center of which there came a torrent of lead. I determined to tackle this band and directed the bow of my steamer to the sterns of the nine vessels. When I had gotten in a good position I rang for more speed, and drove the iron prow of the steamer into the rear of the schooner which was on the starboard side of the fleet. This proved to be the schooner Julia A. Jones, Capt. John A. Wilson. The stem of my boat plowed through the stern of the vessel until the anchor chains hung over the companionway. So firmly did the steamer strike that it was with some difficulty that I could get her out. The schooner began to fill at once, and as I backed clear I found a man had climbed over the bow. This was Peter Mullen, who said he was a sailor on the Julia Jones. I sent him below.

"All this time the McLane was a good target for the dredgers' fire, and they poured a constant stream into the pilot-house, cook-room, and in fact all parts of my boat were struck. After backing away I once more headed for the remaining eight boats, and this time I succeeded in striking the J. C. Mahoney just a little to the starboard of her rudder. She sank in a short time.

"By this time the remaining dredgers began to make sail, and with a good breeze they soon disappeared in the darkness. I singled out a large schooner, and when I hailed the captain he hauled down his jib. This was Capt. Wright Jones, of the Maggie Corbitt. I boarded this boat and found unculled oysters, and I took him in tow for Centreville. By the time I had made fast to the Corbitt there was not a boat in sight."

A resident near by the scene of the combat, who was standing on shore at the time, says that the battle was a terrific one, and that after it was over many of the dredgers ran their vessels ashore and scattered through the woods. He states that at least seventy-five vessels were on the forbidden grounds at the time.

It has been ascertained by later advices that notwithstanding the desperate character of the encounter, no lives were lost, the missing men of the Julia Jones having turned up in the jail at Centreville.

The struggle with the dredgers has just begun. They are hardy and desperate men and have been thoroughly aroused by the affair with the Governor McLane. They are burning with revenge, and, it was ascertained in Baltimore, on Wednesday, were contemplating an attack on the police sloop Folly, off Hackett's point. Gov. Jackson was notified and applied to the Commandant of the Naval Academy for the assistance of a government vessel to protect the Folly if attacked. The commandant telegraphed to the Secretary of the Navy, who responded granting the request. The purpose of the pirates, it is understood, was to sink the Folly, with her officers and crew. Capt Clarke is her commander. Several government launches were armed and sent to her assistance and the dredgers would have met a warm reception if they had attempted to carry out their purpose.

Fire on the Ocean Steamship Company's wharf at Savannah destroyed $200,000 worth of cotton Thursday night.

The cooper shop of the Standard Oil Company at Pittsburg was burned Thursday night. Loss, $80,000. Two firemen were seriously injured.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10th, 1888.—Senator Plumb, of Kansas, indignantly denies the rumor that he is opposed to the Senate tariff bill. He says that the bill has no opposition whatever among Republican Senators.

The House Committee on Pacific Railroads has decided to press the Pacific Railroad Funding bill to an early vote. It is generally thought that the bill will pass if it ever gets to a vote, but owing to the very determined opposition which it encounters, it is by no means certain that a vote will be had upon it.

Senator Quay has received a pair of fine blooded horses from the Republicans of Tennessee as a token of their appreciation of his excellent management of the late campaign.

A very interesting campaign lie has been going the rounds of the newspapers to the effect that Representative Phelps and Ex-Senator Sewell were indebted to the Republican national committee $60,000, for money furnished by the committee for use in New Jersey, they having pledged themselves to repay the money if the State did not go Republican. Mr. Phelps in denying the very absurd story states that New Jersey did not receive a penny from the national committee, and that in answer to his request for funds he was told that New Jersey must take care of herself.

Governor Beaver, of Pennsylvania, Chief Marshal of the Inaugural parade, has appointed Adjutant General Hastings of the same State, Chief of Staff.

The Republican National Executive Committee held several meetings here last week to hear reports and wind up the business of the campaign. They also discussed the feasability of establishing a permanent headquarters in this city. It is expected that they will hold another meeting in January.

Some amusement has been created here by the absurd action of the administration in ordering three naval vessels to Hayti to enforce the demand made by the State Department for the release of an American vessel seized by the Haytian Government. An oyster sloop would be strong enough to cope with Hayti. But the amusement comes in when the fact is remembered that the present administration allowed American vessels to be seized and chased around by the Canadians at their pleasure without ever thinking or sending any of our vessels to demand their release. A row with Hayti and a row with England are very different matters. Even the present incompetent administration recognizes that fact.

In the Criminal Court of Baltimore, on Wednesday, the jury in the case of Stephen Conroy, indicted for the murder of Patrick J. O'Donnell, found the accused guilty of manslaughter and recommended him to the mercy of the court. On Thursday Judge Phelps imposed a fine of $1 and the costs of the prosecution and sentenced Conroy to jail for 18 days. The circumstances of the killing, briefly stated, are these: Conroy supported his mother and O'Donnell was in the habit of going to the house and plying the woman with liquor and drinking himself until both became grossly drunk. Conroy remonstrated with him and ordered him to keep away from the premises. On the day of the killing he drove O'Donnell away and was then absent himself until some time in the evening. When he returned he found his mother and O'Donnell lying in the sitting room in a revolting state of drunkenness and dishabille, and then attacked the former, kicking and beating him and finally throwing him into the street, causing his death. The mild sentence imposed by the court meets with general approbation.

A terrific explosion occurred in David Oliver's oatmeal mill at Chicago, on Tuesday last. The building was wrecked and four men were killed. Adjacent buildings were also badly shattered, among them a planing mill, in which 20 men were at work, and a number of dwellings houses. The men all escaped from the planing mill, but some of them were badly injured. People in the dwellings were thrown from their beds with violence to the floor or hurled against the walls. The mill and other buildings caught fire and were destroyed. It was with difficulty that some of the women and children occupying the dwelling houses were saved. The explosion, it is supposed, was caused by meal dust.
