OVERCOATS.

From Lancet.

The teaching of modern science and of ancient custom goes to show that heat production within the body has much to do with the tissue changes concerned in muscular activity and with healthy digestion. It is conserved by warm and moderate, wasted in evaporation by excessive, clothing. Finally, by a simple nervous reaction, it is increased after the contact of external cold. It follows from these observations that, if we be so clad with comfortable underclothing that surface perspiration is not formed in excess and is rapidly removed, one great cause of chill—sudden evaporation—is done away with. Outer cold, then, provided it is not too severe, only touches, as it were, the spring of the heat-making metabolism, and, exciting an elastic rebound in the chain of vaso-motor fibers, awakens that oxidative action by which every tissue is made to yield its share of heat to the body. This bracing influence is lost wholly or partly to those who are too heavily clothed, and in its place we may have a dangerous excess of surface heat. It is for this reason that we have before protested, as we now do, against the indiscriminate use of the thick and heavy overcoat. We would rather see men in fairly robust condition, especially if young, clad warmly next the skin, and wearing either a light top coat or none at all. There can be no doubt that the habitual use of great-coats is indirectly accountable for the chills which they are intended to prevent. Were the overcoat worn continuously, it might attain its object. Its intermittent use, even when ample underclothing is worn, affords no solid guarantee of safety, but rather the reverse. The man of sedentary habits has especial need to remember this. He emerges daily from a warm breakfast room clothed in ordinary winter garments, with probably woolen underwear, and over all the heavy ulster or top coat. After a short walk he finds that the sense of warmth he began with is more than maintained. He arrives at his office or place of business, and off goes the overcoat, though the air of the newly opened room is as cold as that without, and draughty in addition. During the day perhaps he travels to and from adjacent business houses wearing only his house clothing. The overcoat is laid aside till closing time reminds him of the journey home. The frequent result is that somehow, between the hours of his departure and return, he is chilled. No doubt he would run as great a risk if, lightly clad, he were to face the rigor of a winter day. In this case, however, exercise and habit might do much to develop the power of endurance, and there would, at all events, be less danger of sudden cold acting upon a freely perspiring surface. Woolen underclothing represents a state of healthy comfort intermediate between these extremes, and more resistant to chill than either. In commending its use, however, we do not assert that the influence of age and constitution is to be overlooked. Youth can oppose a power of resistance to depressing agencies which does not reside in the worn-out nerve centers of a riper age. Similarly, that elastic reaction which characterizes the nervous and sanguine types is not to be looked for in the lax tissues of the lymphatic. The weaker physique naturally calls for fuller protection than the stronger; and any rule requiring the disuse of the overcoat should allow of reasonable exceptions in favor of the old and constitutionally feeble. Unusual severity of weather, especially if associated with night air and the loss of sleep which this implies, is another condition which might well constitute an exception. In such a case we are compelled to add some form of overcoat to the ordinary amount of clothing. Some parts of the body—for example, the chest, throat, and feet—are certainly more susceptible to cold than others. As a useful safeguard, cold or tepid bathing of such parts is in merited favor. The custom so common with many persons, especially with women, of walking out in thin-soled boots often plays an important part in catching cold. The progress of time and of rational thought may be expected to bring in a more comfortable arrangement by clothing the foot in woolen hosiery and a stouter boot.

Virginia Knox, of Pittsburg, Pa., recently married a man who claimed to be the Count di Montercale, of Italy. A dispatch from Paris some weeks ago gave an account of a disturbance between the young couple at a prominent hotel. Mayor McCallin, of Pittsburg, is in receipt of a letter from the real Count di Montercale saying that Virginia Knox's husband is his gardner's son. The impostor's brutality to his wife since they reached Europe has resulted in her separation from him.

THE NEW YORK GRAPHIC.

A New and Influential Factor in Republican Politics.

COMPLETE REORGANIZATION.
NEW MANAGEMENT.

As a vigorously Republican newspaper The Graphic appeals to Republicans all over the country for support. The new ownership is daily making a better paper in news and illustrations and proposes to aid sound Republican Principles with aggressive pen and pencil.

The Graphic is the only illustrated daily paper in the world, and offers the best record of passing events for out-of town readers through its pictures and news columns.

The Graphic now has a news service and staff of writers unsurpassed by any other evening paper in New York.

THE WEEKLY GRAPHIC

Is just the paper for Republicans throughout the country who need a general newspaper in addition to their local weekly. It is a twelve-page paper, six of which are devoted to clever pictures of current political and news events, and six pages to bright articles by bright writers, social, political and literary chat with all that makes a sound newspaper.

REPUBLICAN: During the coming year some of the most prominent leaders in the Republican party will contribute timely articles to The Weekly Graphic.

Remember that The Graphic, being an illustrated paper, does not interfere with any other paper.
