AROUND THE APIARY.

We recently made a visit to the apiary of an old-fashioned bee-keeper. Some would call him an old fogy, but in this instance we hardly believe the term will apply, because he does not insist that his way is best and that so-called improvements are a sham. We will tell our readers some things that we saw, hoping that some may learn how not to keep bees. The bees were kept on a long bench under a low shed. Such a building furnishes an excellent wind-break for winter, but for summer use is very unhandy, because the hives are crowded close together, which is confusing to the bees and often causes the loss of young queens by their getting into the wrong hives when returning from their wedding flight. To be compelled to work in a stooping position when handling bees is a serious objection to a shed. Having several hives on one bench is objectionable, because while handling one colony others are liable to be shaken and disturbed. The bees were all kept in ordinary box hives, and looking into several of these revealed the fact that quite a number had died during the winter, not having secured honey enough to carry them through. These were all swarms from last season, and consequently the comb was clean and bright. This, of course, will be torn out and made into wax, when if it had been in the frame hives it could have been used to an excellent advantage in building up new colonies this season. Had the bee-keeper been a careful one, these late weak swarms would have been united, and if necessary, fed sufficiently to insure their wintering. If the best combs were now transferred to frame hives the holes caused by the cross sticks would frequently be so large as to be objectionable. This bee-keeper, although getting a good many pounds of honey in a year, never realizes any cash profit from it because it is made in large boxes, the very way in which it can be sold to the poorest advantage. Improved appliances for the apiary are sold at such reasonable prices that there seems to be little reason in such a method. Reader, there is not just such an apiary in your back yard, is there?

HORSES' FEAR OF FIRE.

An early-morning fire in the neighborhood made necessary immediate transfer of the teams and other property in the American Express Company's barns at Buffalo, N. Y. This was done (and thousands of dollars of value saved) by knowledge and coolness of the person in charge, who gave the following order:

"Men, we must move. Don't do one thing to excite a horse. Lead them to a watering trough in regular order; throw on the harness, and hitch on two wagons or sleighs instead of one. The horses will all think they are going to work, and we will clean this storehouse out."

To show how frantic stabled horses become when threatened by fire, even at a considerable distance, The Buffalo Express prints the appended note of experience of the same occasion:

"A man living half a dozen or more blocks from the fire, in a section where the cinders and smoke were directly blown, went out to feed his horse shortly after daylight. He opened a large door, gave the horse his measure of oats, and passed up into the loft to throw down hay. When he came down, the horse, a well bred, but gentle animal, was swinging his head (his mouth was full of oats), snorting and pawing—evidently in great excitement. The barn had filled with the heavy smell of smoke from the fire, and this it was that so frightened the horse. It was two hours before the animal quieted down and went on with his breakfast, and he is a horse with an appetite which lasts twenty-four hours each day."

A London paper, discussing the recent steamer explosion caused by copper steam pipes, suggests undesirableness of using copper piping at all, possessing, as it does, no appreciable advantage over good lap-welded steel or iron tubes. It appears, moreover, that a very good pipe may be made of thin steel riveted, and, though incapable of steam-tight caulking, may be brazed steam tight, its strength depending, of course, mainly on the rivets.

Even the stenographers are apprehensive that mechanism may yet knock them out of work. The Metropolitan Stenographers' Association, of New York, recently held debate upon this question: "Will Mechanical Invention Supersede the Stenographer?" They spoke of many of the dangers by which they are threatened, including the phonograph, the graphophone and the typewriter.

In the town of Bessbrook, Ireland, where John G. Richardson employs 3,000 people in the manufacture of Irish linen, no liquor has been sold for forty years; and as a result there is neither policeman, prison, pawnshop nor pauper in the town.

Thirty-five years ago American boys had aspirations to become President of the United States. Now their ambition is to become a $5,000 baseball player.

COWS AND CHURNING.

A variety of conditions beyond her control render the cow erratic as to milk and butter outcome, for reasons which "The American Dairyman" sets forth as follows:

"Milk is made up from many things she eats and drinks, and it is hardly possible to have the quality and character of these supplies exactly alike one day with another. Then her appetite varies as much as a human being's does from day to day. The state of the atmosphere, its dryness or dampness, heat or cold, may affect her to say nothing of the exciting events of which we know nothing. One thing is certain—the more uniform and comfortable her surroundings the more uniform will be her yield."

The same writer maintains that right or wrong temperature of cream may make a difference of an hour or more in time required for churning:

"Cream in normal condition churns best at about 62 degrees Fahrenheit. Any variation from this normal condition must be found by experimelting, and no one can tell except by trial just what the best or proper temperature for the cream of your cows may be. Start, therefore, at 58 and churn at each degree on up to 66 or 67, unless you have passed the proper point. Having found it, there will be but little variation, except with extreme changes of the outside atmosphere, which will occasionally have to be allowed for."

The faculty of memory is the foundation of genius. Few, comparatively, are acquainted with the fine machinery of the memory, which is as capable of being regulated and governed as the clock on the mantel. A celebrated writer, whose memory was treacherous, arranged a book with 365 pages, to accommodate the days of the year, and resolved to recollect an anecdote for every page as insignificant and remote as he was able, rejecting all anecdotes under ten years of age, and to his surprise he filled every inch of space, although until this experiment was tried he had no conception of the extent of his faculty. Wolf, the German metaphysician, relates of himself that by the most persevering habit he solved his algebraic problems in bed and in darkness, and geometrically composed all his methods by the aid of imagination and memory. To register the transactions of the day, with observations upon them, is an exercise that soon drifts into a habit that is as profitable as it soon becomes easy. It was thus that Darwin educated himself in the art of thinking.

The mule is a hybrid with no pedigree, belongs to no genus or no species, has a bad reputatiou, and has been abused all his life. If persistent treatment of any kind will finally breed that characteristic into the blood and bones he has sufficient excuse for being an Ishmael among other animals, with his heels against all of them. Even in the questionable sawdust circle he has no place of "trust, honor or emolument," but is ever compelled to be a guy and a clown, and yet he possesses many solid virtues. He matures quicker than the horse, is hardier, will subsist on less and coarser food, is less liable to disease, is stronger in proportion to weight, needs less care, will do as much work every day and live twice as many years, and as such commends himself to all who have occasion to employ beasts of burden. His ample, elongated, auricular appendages denote acuteness of hearing, and the posterior bones, muscles and sinews of his physical anatomy are noted for their flexibility and aptness at sudden impulses of accelerated impetus.

According to a Washington correspondent to the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, an interesting not to say valuable discovery has been made by Capt. Weedin, in charge of the animals at the Zoo. The building is infested by rats, and how to get rid of them has long been a perplexing question. Traps were used, but nothing would tempt the rodents to enter. In a store-room drawer was placed a quantity of sunflower seeds, used as food for some of the birds. Into this drawer the rats gnawed their way, a fact which led the Captain to experiment with them for bait in the traps. The result was that the rats can't be kept out. A trap which appears crowded with six or eight rats is found some mornings to hold fifteen. They are turned into the cages containing weasles and minks. The latter will kill a rat absolutely almost before one can see it, so rapid are its movements. The weasles are a trifle slower, but none of the rats escaped them.

It is estimated that there are now living over 1,500,000 ex-soldiers and sailors, of whom over 340,000 are pensioners, and there are about 400,000 members of the Grand Army of the Republic.

According to Alexander McDugal, in the United Kingdom there is a population of five and a half millions in a state of poverty, for which drink is mainly responsible.

According to "The Farmers' Voice," the Bible has to be printed in twenty-nine different languages to supply the people living in Pennsylvania.

WHY IS IT

The Farmers' Fertilizer Company

OF WESTMINSTER, MD.,

IS ALWAYS ON TOP?

Because only absolutely pure material is used, and the Company, besides, guarantees the same class of goods to stockholders and the trade alike.

The Company carries the largest and best assorted stock of

BONE AND CHEMICALS

In the State, outside the city of Baltimore.

Its goods are all in good drillable condition and are guaranteed to give satisfaction. The street recently opened past the Hotel Albion will relieve any objection to the railroad heretofore existing. As the company proposes to stand by its friends and customers in the future as in the past, it asks a call from the agricultural trade before purchasing elsewhere, as it means business and will not be undersold.

Special Attention will be paid to the Compounding of Private Formulas.
