WHOLE GRAIN FOR HORSES.

Our Paris correspondent says that M. Warsage is not an advocate of crushed grain for horses whose teeth are intact and complete. By diminishing mastication, the salivation is also reduced, and without the latter digestion would be imperfect. In the case of old animals with worn or damaged teeth, or young animals whose teething is not achieved, crushing of grain is a benefit. As a general observation, crushed grain for horses has a host of opponents. Its consumption necessitates the absorption of a large volume of water; result, obesity and a reduction of muscular and nerve power, owing to the accumulation of water in the tissues; while also the animal becomes flabby and easily fatigued. In the case where crushed grain is given with chaffed fodder to aged horses, the fodder ought not to be cut too short, and wetted, so that the mixture will not stick to the palate. If the mixture be dry, the horse will separate the materials. If the fodder be too chaffed, the animal will swallow the ration too greedily, thus producing imperfect digestion and colic. Neither must the mixture be given as a mash; the horse is not a pig nor the manger a trough.

This coincides with results reached in the United States by those who are interested in caring for large numbers of horses. Aside from the loss of time, the practice of crushing oats for horses has been found useless, if not positively injurious to the animals. And this will be found to be the case with all animals kept for breeding purposes. For fattening animals, where the first object to be attained is a quick growth of fat, the principle of grinding the feed is probably correct. But with breeding stock, which must be kept in sound and vigorous health for a term of years, the more thoroughly they masticate their food, thus mixing it with the saliva, the better. It will keep their stomachs in a more vigorous condition to carry on the process of digestion and prevent much trouble from diseases which arise from impaired digestion. With their small stomachs horses must have their food well masticated or serious attacks of indigestion and colic will certainly be common occurrences. When a horse is fed he should be allowed ample time to eat his rations, and be entirely free from annoyance.

ENSILAGING.

Do you know of any analysis having been made to ascertain the relative value of the grain of corn as it comes from the silo in well preserved ensilage, as compared to corn allowed to ripen and secured in the dry state? It seems clear that if the full feeding value of the grain is preserved in ensilage, the question of feeding out our corn crops, including both stalk and grain, in the most economical method that scientific research has yet discovered, is solved; for by cutting all up together the grain is mixed with the fodder, and the extra labor and expense of husking and grinding are avoided, beside affording a succulent food at a season when nature's avenues for furnishing fresh supplies are closed and when it is consequently greatly relished by our domestic animals. Not that corn even in its best condition supplies a complete food without the addition of more nitrogenous elements; but it is probably the most important factor in the food supply for any one product that is adapted to general cultivation over the greater part of the United States east of the Rocky Mountains, and as such we are naturally interested in ascertaining the most practical and economical method of preserving and feeding the same.

To the above question submitted to the Country Gentleman, the following answer is given:

The specific point desired to be understood by V.—whether the grain of corn losses materially in digestible nutrients by passing through the silo—may be stated in a general way: That in regard to ensilage corn the heat to which it is subjected in silo causes a slight loss of albuminoids and of carbo-hydrates other than fat but that the fat is relatively increased, and it may be presumed that the effect upon the grain would be the same. But as the digestibility of ensilage is much greater than of the same material in a dried state, this loss is more than compensated. V. gives the great point in favor of ensilaging the whole crop—the great saving of labor in handling it, and the healthier condition in which it is fed.

A former operatic singer, now a teacher of singing, says that it is impossible to stand on a carpet or rug and sing one's best. Bare boards make a good floor to stand on when you sing. Stone is just as good and glass is better, but carpets deaden the voice and make a trained singer feel choked and suffocating. To sing well one must not have anything above or in front to catch the voice. Even the brim of a derby hat will impair the voice of a man who wears it while he sings. That is why singers stand far out by the footlights to sing, and because the stage of the Academy of Music in New York, projects far beyond the proscenium arch. Vocalists always will love that old theatre.

USES OF SOAPSTONE.

A writer in a London journal calls attention to the unappreciated uses and preservative qualities of soapstone, a material, he says, which possesses what may be regarded as extraordinary qualities in withstanding atmospheric influences, those especially which have so much to do with the corrosion of iron and steel; it being a well-known fact that the inside of a steamer which is not exposed to the action of salt water, like the bottom, corrodes much more quickly than the outside. It has, too, an additional quality in this line, one which adapts it in a remarkable degree as a protective paint for ships and this is the extreme fineness of its grain; indeed, ground soapstone is one of the finest materials producible, and, from experiments made, it is found that no other material is capable of taking hold of the fibre of iron and steel so readily and firmly as this. It is also lighter than metallic pigments, and on this account, when mixed as a paint, is capable of covering a larger surface than zinc white, red lead, or oxide of iron. In China, soapstone has long been largely used for preserving structures built of sandstone and other stones liable to crumble from the effect of the atmosphere; and the covering with powdered soapstone in the form of paint on some obelisks in that country composed of stone liable to atmospheric deterioration, has been the means of preserving them intact for hundreds of years.

A Chinaman in Canton was in the habit of stealing his master's money and swallowing it. At last he died of his bad habits, and when the surgeons examined him thirty-two tenscent pieces were found in the interior, and two of them had lodged so awkwardly as to cause his death. "Such," piously remarks the Chinese commentator, "are the wages of unhallowed greed." If money-swallowing is a common habit of Ah Sin we can understand why, when he dies abroad, his relatives are so anxious to have his material envelope sent home to them. A dead Chinaman may be as good as a gold mine to his sorrowing kinsmen.

If boys knew what golden capital a "good name" was they would work hard to get it. Well did the wisest man say it "is rather to be chosen than great riches." It has helped many a man to acquire riches. It is of great importance to a boy what the men of the place say of him. Never fancy they do not know you—that they have no interest in what you do. Every man with sons of his own takes an interest in other men's sons. There is nothing like obliging ways to make friends of people and to lead them to speak well of you. That will be a stepping-stone to your success in life.

A physician was negotiating the other day for a horse, which was warranted sound, a good roadster and everything that the heart of a driver could desire. As a final precaution he inquired: "Is he afraid of anything on the road?" "Well, not much of anything," hesitated the owner. "He shies a little at anything high—like the entrance to a cemetery." And the man did not realize that he had said the wrong thing till the doctor's quizzical expression took the wool from his wits. Well, we are all a bit afraid of the entrance to a cemetery, but, shy as we may, thither we tend.

Canterbury, N. H., has a Quaker church that was built in 1792 and has not been shingled since that time. The shingles then put on the roof were of heart pine, and were fastened on with wooden pegs.

"Pawn me honah, deah boy." "Don't" interrupted his friend, "I beg of you, don't; you couldn't raise enough on it to buy a cord for your eye glass." And the conversation was not resumed.

Accounted For—Stranger: "What is the matter with this town? Everybody looks haggard and played out. Had a plague here?" Citizen: "No. The pigs in clover puzzle struck the place last week."

"Mother: "One of you boys has been stealing raisins again: I have found the the seeds on the floor. Which one of you was it?" Tommy: "It wasn't me. I swallowed the seeds in mine."

He (who in attempting to get some pond lillies has fallen in): "Don't I look the very essence of woe, Miss Brown?" She: "Oh, no, Mr. Jones; you look more like Pond's Extract."

"You all remember the words of Webster," shouted an orator. "No, I don't" interrupted a man in the gallery. "Do you expect a man to remember the whole dictionary?"

"I say, Jenkins, can you tell a young chicken from an old one?" "Of course I can." "Well, how?" "By the teeth." "Chickens don't have teeth." "No, but I have."

There is advertised for sale in Worcesterchire, England, the lease of a piece of property which has 1,711 years to run, it being made for 2,000 years, beginning in 1600.
