VISIT TO GETTYSBURG.

FRIZELLBURG, MD., Sept. 15, 1889.

Editor American Sentinel:—Once more in the lovely garden-spot of beautiful Carroll county, where the eyes and the mind are soothed, and where the body is made comfortable! It is, indeed, a charming country, and friends here have ever been exceedingly kind; ever watchful for the comfort of their guests and kindred. No matter where we go, or how attractive the place, our hearts always turn in fondness and affection to the old home, the warm hearts, and the lovely fields of Carroll, where peace reigns supreme, and where nature is time can change or distance efface. Here some of the happiest days of our lives have been spent, and much of physical good to an enfeebled body gained. Thus it is that we found ourselves seated on the great porch of the Rinehart mansion in the early days of September, surrounded by the family and friends, talking over the events of the past and the present, and forming plans for the future, when the doctor exclaimed:

"Joseph, how would you like to go to Gettysburg? We can drive up one day and return the next, and I do not think the trip will injure you! Jennie and Miss Joe can go along, and we will stop over night at Aunt Lizzie's; or, if she is crowded, drive on to Shiveley's, where we are quite sure to be comfortably housed. You know the Pennsylvania Regimental Monuments are to be dedicated on the 11th and 12th, and in them you are especially interested from the fact that some of them were in your command; in fact, fought side by side with you there and on other battlefields. The new Pennsylvania College building is also to be dedicated, and as I am an alumnus of that famous institution, pleasure and satisfaction would be afforded to us all by the visit there in these very eventful days."

Of course I readily responded to the query and suggestion, for my wish had always been to be at Gettysburg when these monuments should be dedicated, having been too far away when that to my own regiment (the Seventh Ohio) was erected and embalmed with the tears of the living for the honored dead it commemorated. That field has always been very sacred to me, and that spot on Culp's Hill, which was so stubbornly contended for by the Ohio and Pennsylvania troops of Geary, is the one particular shrine at which we worship whenever a pilgrimage is made to that Mecca of the patriotic people of our country.

So, all plans having been perfected, and the morning of September 11, 1889, being fair, the Doctor, Miss Josephine Steever, Mrs. Joseph S. Clarke and the Major, in an easy carriage, behind a splendid team of horses, left Frizellburg for Gettysburg at 9.15, making 18 miles to the foot of Round Top by 12 o'clock. (Fast traveling, wasn't it?) Here we found a party of veterans around a newly completed monument on the extreme reserve line of the Sixth Army Corps, and waited till they had finished singing

"My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty;
Of thee I sing,"

which they did with fine effect, aided by the sweet voices of their wives and daughters, who had journeyed with them to be present at the one eventful ceremony of a life-time.

Then through the woods and among the great bowlders we rode to the foot of Little Round Top, passed the point at which our troops of the Twelfth Corps entered on the first day's fight, and where they stood on the afternoon of the second, when the fierce fighting was being waged for the possession of Granite Spur and along Sickles' front. Here more monuments were seen, and from thence to the Devil's Den, through the Wheat Field, along the crest to which our troops advanced against the enemy on July 2; along the edge of the Peach Orchard and down the Emmittsburg road, was a succession of tablets, shafts, memorials and monuments most beautiful in conception, and marking the points at which the troops had fought. All were in process of dedication, and thousands of old soldiers and their families were present, with bands of music here and there enlivening the occasion by giving forth the grand old tunes which had in the past inspired them, as well as the men whose graves and valor their comrades and friends were now assembled to honor and to mark for this and future ages.

This picture was varied by groups of people eating their luncheons on the great rocks and under the trees. Other groups were being photographed at the base of the monuments just unveiled, while others were in earnest conversation over the particular action or incident which had occurred at this or that point more than twenty-six years ago. All were sober; all were happy, even while a shade of sadness came over them when the past was recalled.

A driving storm of rain and wind was now upon us; so, we hurried toward the town, at the edge of which, coming up the main road towards the National Military Cemetery, was a column of veterans and a band of music. At its head were carried two flags, on one of which I saw the White Star of the famous old Twelfth Corps, which I had followed through so many campaigns, and which had ever been a symbol of hope and victory. As we approached nearer I saw that this column was the remnant of a part of Geary's old Division, being the 28th and 147th Pennsylvania Regiments and Knapp's Independent Pennsylvania Battery, this flag being carried by Captain George W. Lees, of the first-named regiment, who, upon seeing the writer, obliqued from the line to grasp my hand and shake it with a fervor felt only by old soldiers. It was a most inspiring incident, and so affected me that at the moment I could have leaped from the carriage and followed that procession and those flags as I had in the past. But my feeble health and my crutches made that impossible.

In the town many thousands of strangers were assembled; flags, bunting, flowers, emblems of welcome, gay decorations, and bands of music, were met on every hand, while veterans in Grand Army of the Republic uniform were everywhere, the badge of that wonderful organization and the various corps marks of the old Army of the Potomac being displayed on the breasts of those who had the proud right to wear them. Never before was there such a gathering, and every train brought thousands more, until every inch of room was occupied, and many had not where to lay their heads for rest that night; men, women and children pleading with the citizens for the privilege of lying upon their parlor floors or in their barns, which appeals were freely granted, with the regret that greater comfort could not be given them.

At 3 o'clock we reached the residence of Mrs. Samuel Weaver, a lady who had a remarkable experience during the battle, and whose house was within the rebel lines from the afternoon of the first day; a battery planted at the head of her street raking all before it, while the line of battle stretched through her garden. Later on, it was her husband and son (Dr. Rufus B., now of Philadelphia,) who removed all the Confederate dead and shipped them South in compliance with a contract made with the Southern Memorial Association, for which work Dr. Weaver has not yet been paid. It was this lady's son Peter (now of Hanover, Pa.) who took the first photographs of scenes incident to the battle, and his collection of views from then till now is one of the largest in the country.

While we were present Mrs. Weaver was busily engaged in making temporary straw mattresses, to be laid on her spacious floors to accommodate some of the throng that was then overflowing the limits of the hotels and boarding houses. She was anxious to have us remain, but in view of the excitement and the crowd we felt it would be unwise to run the risk of loss of rest and sleep; and, full of gratitude for her kindness, moved on to Fairfield, some eight miles distant near the mountains and the scene of a severe action between the Sixth United States Cavalry and the Sixth Virginia Cavalry on the afternoon of July 3, 1863. We arrived soon after 7, P. M., and at the famous old hotel were comfortably quartered, our old friends and hosts, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Shively, giving us the best rooms in their hospitable and spacious mansion. To the Doctor this visit was especially pleasant, for here he was married, and here he practiced as a physician for four years. In the cavalry fight mentioned he had acted no inconsiderable part, and had given to Gen. Buford valuable information which he and his now venerable father-in-law, Peter Grabill, Esq., (then a wealthy farmer and miller of Emmittsburg), had obtained, both afterwards rendering valuable assistance in the care of the wounded, the Doctor's skill as a surgeon serving him to very good purpose in the amputation of Major Starr's arm, while his estimable wife dressed the wounds of others, and prepared for burial the body of Lieut. Balder, who had been shot in the skirmish in the old town prior to the battle at Marshall's farm on the Cashtown road. It was a visit to familiar scenes and among warm friends, and to the Doctor was especially enjoyable.

Early on the morning of the 12th we returned, going via the Katalysine Springs Hotel, through the grove where Gen. Reynolds was killed, then along the line of the first day's battle to Barlow's Knob, and across the line of retreat to Cemetery Hill, where the Department of Pennsylvania, G. A. R., was encamped in 1400 tents, the largest number seen in Gettysburg since the war. Securing admission, we found our way to the headquarters of Post 5, of Philadelphia, on arrival at which the writer was lifted from the carriage and carried in the arms of his old comrades to the tent of the commander, Magnus J. Collins, so glad were they to see him, and where he and his devoted wife met many old friends, among them Mrs. Joseph Gregson, President of the Ladies' Aid Society of Post 5, with other esteemed ladies of that devoted band that has done so much towards the alleviation of the sufferings of soldiers and their families, and of which Mrs. Clarke was an honored officer and is still a member. The Doctor and Miss Steever enjoyed this reception almost as much as we did, for he is an enthusiast in all that relates to Gettysburg, while Miss Steever was represented in the war by three brothers in the navy.

Thence we went to Culp's Hill where the line of breastworks thrown up by our troops is still in a good state of preservation; where many splendid monuments have been erected; where some of the hardest and long-continued fighting was done on the second and third days, and where the Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania regiment was then in the act of dedicating its massive monument, crowned by a white star of immense size. Here, in the driving rain, but well protected, we listened to the services, when another reception followed from the veterans of that splendid regiment, and where I had the pleasure of meeting Major Knapp, of Knapp's magnificant Battery, who took from his pocket a small photograph of Col. Wm. R. Creighton, the beloved commander of the Seventh Ohio regiment, who was killed at Ringgold, Ga. Forty years ago I had been associated with that man in the old Cleveland Herald; was with him in the army, and escorted his body to its last resting place in my dear old home. The reader will not wonder when I say that the incident and the time were impressive ones, never to be forgotten.

Taking a hurried ride along the remainder of the line; admiring closely the magnificent memorials of the Seventh, Fifth, and other Ohio regiments, and the handsome monument of the First Maryland P. H. B., (Col. Wm. P. Maulsby's), we wended our way back to the town, and attended the services in the Rink incident to the dedication of the Eighty-four monuments erected by Pennsylvania, and to which dedication the State had paid the travelling expenses of all her veterans who had belonged to those regiments at the time of the battle. It was a memorable gathering, and will live as a pleasant recollection. The monuments were delivered to the State by Gen. J. P. S. Gobin and received by Gen. James A. Beaver in addresses full of patriotism and gratitude; and for the Battlefield Memorial Association they were received by Hon. Edward McPherson in an address crowded with appreciation and praise of the noble work Pennsylvania's sons had there accomplished. Grand orations were delivered by Gen. H. H. Bingham and Capt. Jos. G. Rosengarten, from which much of historic fact was gleaned, and to which the vast audience listened in intensest interest.

Again taking dinner at Mrs. Weaver's, and bidding all friends an affectionate adieu, the journey homeward was renewed in a pelting and steady rain. Our course lay along the Taneytown road, thus enabling us to view the line from the Cemetery to Round Top, along which was the brave and masterly Gen. James Gordon Meade's headquarters, and where to-day may be seen many of the finest memorials on Gettysburg's wonderful battlefield. There bronze and granite memorials not only mark the spots on which brave men stood in defence of liberty, the Union, and the uplifting of mankind, but they stand as tributes of a grateful people to the memory of the heroes who "fell that the nation might live," and as educators to the living of this and all future generations.

It was 9 o'clock when we arrived at the familiar home in Frizellburg, our faithful horses, guided by the skillful hand of our guardian and escort the Doctor, having brought us through the inky darkness in comfort and in safety. Here we were again welcomed by Mrs. Rinehart, and to that noble-hearted lady and her whole-souled husband we are indebted for one of the most enjoyable trips of our lives. No more generous hearts than theirs can be found in Maryland, while their comfortable home attracts all who have ever shared its hospitality. May they long live to enjoy it!

Yours, truly,
JOSEPH S. CLARKE.

The Farmers' Fertilizer Company

Again calls the attention of Farmers of Carroll and adjoining counties to its large and carefully selected stock of

FERTILIZERS

Which are manufactured of PURE material only. These goods have been thoroughly tested and have in every case proven satisfactory. The company therefore feels justified in saying that its goods are the best in the county. In addition to this the company assures the farmers that its prices are the lowest for the same quality of goods of any factory, agency or house in the county for the following reasons:

1st. It buys its material from 75 cents to $2.00 per ton less than any other home companies because of buying in larger quantities.
2nd. It has no agents.
3rd. It pays no premiums and, better than all, instead of conceding a gain of from $5.00 to $10.00 only on $100 purchases it assures to every purchaser an advantage of from $2.00 to $3.00 PER TON, according to the quality of goods, less than any other establishment in the county, which is a saving of from $12.00 to $16.00 on $100 purchases.

With a view to economy the Farmers' Fertilizer Company carries no more varieties of brands than is needed for the production of a good crop. What it has, however, are pure and suited to the soils of the county.

The company will take pleasure in mixing at a reasonable cost any formula desired.

Farmers who furnish their own sacks will be allowed $1.00 for each ton of Fertilizer purchased. CASH SALES will be allowed a discount of 2 per cent.

In addition to its well known

BRANDS 1, 2 AND 3,

Three new Brands have been added, ranging in price from $17.00 to $19.00 per ton, which are from $2.00 to $3.00 per ton cheaper than any goods of the same quality on the market.

To be convinced of the truth of these declarations call at its factory and see for yourselves.
