The Oldest House.

One of the oldest houses in America is the stone mansion on the Staats farm, about four miles below the village of Greenbush, N. Y., on the river bank. The building was erected of blue stone and brick in 1650, and at present is occupied by Lawrence and Philip Staats, and is in a splendid state of preservation. The house faces south and west, and commands an extended view of the Hudson and surrounding country. Hard by the ancient dwelling, on a pleasant knoll, is the family burial ground, which contains the remains of generation after generation of the Staats family, who came to this country when New York was settled by the Hollanders, about 1614. The Staats farm and the three farms adjoining to the north were occupied when the Van Rensselaer patroon received his grant for twenty-four miles square each side of the river from the king of Holland, but the owners of these farms were exempt from paying him any rent.

Hot Water Relieves Pain.

There is scarcely an ache or pain in the whole body which is not soothed or removed by hot water if applied as follows: Dip a piece of flannel or cloth, of five or six folds or layers, in boiling water and lay it on the painful part, covering it instantly with a dry flannel, of which the edges should extend over the wet one an inch or more; as soon as the wet flannel has dried a little, or in about five minutes, slip it out under one edge of the dry cloth, and introduce another flannel as hot as can be handled. Do this in so adroit a manner as to allow as little cold air as possible to get to the skin touched by the hot flannel; persevere until the pain is removed. Physicians assert that by this hot water poultice the most violent, dry and distressing coughs have been relieved in a few minutes, and some forms of croup subdued in half an hour.

The latest anecdote about the incompetence of the professed cook is that a cook recently engaged, with a number of testimonials of efficiency, was told by her mistress the day after her arrival to boil half a dozen eggs for breakfast. "And here," said the mistress, as she left the kitchen, "is the sand glass, which has always been used for boiling eggs in this house." A quarter of an hour later the mistress, chancing to enter the kitchen, saw the six eggs boiling away merrily in the tin saucepan and the sand glass bobbing about in the middle of them as merrily as could be.

How "lady friends" do hate one another, to be sure! The other day two of an uncertain age who had not recently met were having a chat. "Yes," said No. 1, "it was my birthday yesterday and my dear papa gave me a ring, as usual. He has always given me a ring on my birthday ever since I left school." "Ever since you left school, darling?" re-echoed No. 2, "why, what an extraordinary large collection of rings you must have, love, to be sure."

The Moors are said to have made paper from linen in the thirteenth century, all paper known before that being apparently made from cotton. In the British Museum are some specimens of linen paper from the fourteenth century. Recently Prof. Church has discovered an Episcopal Register of 1293 from Auvergne, in which paper some strands remaining show to have been linen. This carries linen paper back further than was supposed.

The belief that smoke from soft coal may have beneficial sanitary effects is gaining ground. It is claimed that the sulphur in the coal when burned becomes sulphurous acid gas, a well-known disinfectant. Further, that creosote and its allied products are thrown off with the fumes of bituminous coal, and that an atmosphere charged with carbolic acid must be freer from germs of disease than an apparently purer air.

* * *

A fleet of seventy-five barges near Memphis, containing 650,000 bushels of coal, recently suffered from the depredations of countless myriads of shrimps, which ate out the oakum in the seams of the boats, rendering a large working force at the pumps necessary to keep them from sinking. The boats were lately moved into the current, which swept the little incumbrances off, and the leaks stopped.

The eggs of ordinary poultry require, as a rule, twenty-one days to hatch, but this is by no means a universal rule. Cold weather, or a prevailing East wind, will lengthen the time a day or more. Whilst warm weather and an attentive sitter will shorten it.

It is reported that the Swedes have invented a centrifugal machine that churns butter directly from milk instead of separating the cream. If true, the invention will be a very important one, as it will revolutionize dairy methods.

A Chinese doctor in San Francisco is said to enjoy an income from the practice of his profession of $6,000 per month. He has been in America nearly thirty years, and many Caucasians are among his patients.

Ice in the Sick-Room.

A saucerful of shaven ice, says the New York Medical Times, may be preserved for twenty-four hours with the thermometer in the room at 90 degrees Fahrenheit, if the following precautions are observed: Put the saucer containing the ice in a soup plate and cover it with another. Place the soup plates thus arranged on a good heavy pillow, and cover it with another pillow, pressing the pillows so the the plates are completely imbedded in them. An old jack-plane set deep is a most excellent thing with which to shave ice. It should be turned bottom upward, and the ice shoved backward and forward over the cutter.

The Farm and Home says when farmers learn to look upon a cow as a wonderful and delicate piece of mechanism, they may expect a revolution in dairying. A manufacturer can not feed shoddy into a machine and get broadcloth; no more can dairyman feed poor food or swill and get good butter. Never build a silo near the cow stable. The odor will taint the milk by being breathed by the cow.

Salt is seldom given poultry, under the supposition that it is injurious, which is true if the salt is given in large quantities; but recent experiments prove that salt is necessary to a limited extent, as hens will lay more eggs and remain in good condition by allowing salt than if it is withheld entirely. The proper mode of giving salt to poultry is by seasoning the soft food allowed the hens.

Crowding a hundred chickens in a coop that holds only fifty without food and water may save an item of expense, so far as coops are concerned, but it causes a loss when the fowls reach the market in bad condition. Quality takes in not only the fowls as an article, but the condition, neatness, attractiveness and difference from that already in stock and for sale.

The application of potash salts to fruit trees and vines seems to give better results than ashes. The question to be considered in this connection is whether the potash of the ashes first forms a salt with the acid of the soil before being utilized by plants. The potash salts usually give immediate results, which is not always the case with ashes.

A Jersey cow knocked one of her horns off early in spring. The accident was discovered before it became cold. It was put back in its place and tied. In a few days it grew fast, and is now the same as the other. Nothing was done except to pick it from the ground and put it in position while the blood was still oozing from the stump.

To keep celery well during the winter, it must be kept in a cool temperature, say 35 to 38 degrees, dry overhead and only slightly moist at the root. Where a large quantity is stored together, ventilation is necessary. Crisp and nice celery depends a great deal upon the variety grown and the cultural conditions before storing.

Bone dust, says an American Agriculturist writer, should not be mixed with the chicken feed. It is too stimulating and is liable to cause enlargement of the liver in hens that are not laying. Put it where the hens can get it, and those that want it, and need it, can then eat just what they care for and no more.

When a man wants to sell a cow pretty badly—unless it is the breeder of cows for sale—the cow he wants to sell is a good cow not to buy as a rule. We shall never believe that a man can get a good cow in any way as easily as he can get her by intelligent breeding and raising the calf.

The many and various wants of fowls are synonymous with necessities, and no better word can be used in expressing them, nor a better meaning understood in supplying them. Any one want left unsupplied will be sure to be heard from unfavorably in one way or another.

Sometimes after threshing, cows turned into the barnyard at night, with access to a fresh straw stack will pick at the chaff and eat enough to diminish their milk flow. It is this often, rather than the diminished pasture, that lessens the milk yield at this season.

Bran and skimmed milk will make more growth on pigs now than anything else. Corn is required only when pigs are to be made very fat. A ration in which corn is a portion of the food will give better results than to depend entirely upon it for fattening.

A successful dairyman for many years gives it as his conclusion that a well-fed cow that does not earn her entire value in a single year is not worth keeping in the dairy. Says he: "A cow that has cost $75 should make a net earning of $75.

A small crack in the wall of the stable will do greater injury than to leave a window out. More harm results from a constant current of air coming on a portion of the body of an animal than when the animal is exposed entirely.
