Winter Eggs.

gs in winter are the eggs that , but it requires skill and care to induce the hens to lay them. The following from the Ohio Poultry Journal strikes the point fairly: The fowls' winter quarters should be warm and comfortable, not only for their well being, but it is a saving of food and a stimulus to egg production. The use of food is to sustain life and maintain warmth and good condition of body. Food is to fowls what wood or coal is to the stove. Food is the fuel that heats the body, and if the outside atmosphere is kept warm it will not require so much heat in the fowls; or, in other words, they will not require so much food fuel to keep themselves comfortable and spare some for the production of eggs.

In a cold hennery all the food the fowls can consume will only keep up animal heat and supply the wastes of the system. If you want eggs in winter, and your fowls to look well and keep in good condition, a comfortable house, a varied diet of grain, vegetables, meat; cleanliness, pure air, light and plenty of exercise, are the main essentials for prepossessing looks, good condition of body and egg production. As a rule we are too exacting and expectant of productive work, while we neglect their proper care and treatment at a time when they are not in a natural condition to be productive. It will not do to feed them too much or pamper them with highly concentrated food. A warm mess in the morning of a mixture of middlings, corn meal or barley meal, bran and potatoes, turnips or carrots, some small wheat, millets or oats scattered through chaff, leaves, or some loose material to scratch in to keep busy in finding the kernels, some vegetables or roots to pick at during leisure moments, and a full feed of wheat, barley and corn just before going to roost.

The food may be varied every few days, or, better, mixed in each mess. Wheat should constitute the main grain food, with buckwheat, barley and oats. A little corn is good, but too much is too heating and drying to blood and tissues. Ground oats, corn and barley, with middlings and bran mixed in, say half and half, make splendid feed for egg production. Cabbage is the leading vegetable, but carrots, turnips and beets are excellent too if cabbage is not at hand. Fowls may do well by feeding them grain and vegetables in a crude state, but common sense teaches us that a cooked and warm mess seasoned for the morning meal will be better relished and do them more good after a long night's fasting, than if fed to them raw, because it is more easily digested, more heating, and they receive its nutritive properties much quicker.

Concerning Work Horses.

The character of the farm work horse is not to be decided upon its appearance, but mostly by its performance. Of course, soundness is a sine qua non in estimating the value of a work horse but how few farmers test their horses by the amount of work done in the field or on the road? The best walking pace is as valuable to a farmer as the best trotting pace is to the owner of a roadster. And horses differ in regard to their walking pace quite as much as they do in their faster paces. What is the comparison between a pair of horses that will draw a plow at the rate of two miles an hour and another that will do the same work at four miles? To plow an acre is worth at least $2. Forty acres plowed in worth $80. The slow team earns $40 while the fast team earns $80. This difference is equal to the interest on $800 at 5 per cent. So that the farmer who keeps a slow team might profitably pay $400 for a fast walking pair of horses more than the ordinary market value of the horses or $600 or $700 for the better animals and yet make a profit.

They Saw the Point.

The American Indians are noted for their almost solemn gravity in the presence of strangers. The Caribs of Venezuela are described as being equally grim and sedate. Mr. Spence succeeded on one occasion in breaking their reserve. He says that once they actually saw the point to a joke:

"A brave and his squaw brought some firewood to my camp, and as they wanted to get twice its value, the purchase was declined. They were greatly enraged, and after loud maledictions deliberately burned it. Some days after, they appeared again, this time with a bundle of hay for sale. To convince them of the error of their ways, about half of its value was offered. On their declining that abatement, I took a match from my pocket, and suggested that they should make a bonfire of the hay also. A roar of laughter burst from the pair as the fun penetrated their hard heads. It was with difficulty they were induced to take any payment at all for the hay.

Do not give too much seed. If the fowls have run they should at this season forage the larger part of their food. If confined, green food should constitute a large part of their diet, and they should have work enough for good exercise.

Pigs That Are Overfed.

Swine are proverbially greedy, but it is the duty of the owner of the animal to control its natural habits when these are opposed to its well doing, so that the first thing to be done in feeding young pigs is to measure their feed judiciously. They should never have all they will eat.. Only fattening swine should be so fed, and they would soon die from over feeding if they were not killed. When a young pig chokes at the trough, squeals and falls over in a fit, it is overfed; when it goes to the side of the stall, champs its jaws, foams at the mouth, and does nothing else than this, says Southern Farm, it has been overfed, and in both cases it is suffering from congestion of the brain, due to indigestion and disturbed circulation. It is in a state of apoplexy and will probably die anyhow, but the others may be saved by at once reducing their feed to about one-fourth of what they have been getting. The prevalent paralysis of the hind limbs is caused by overfeeding by which the kidneys have been overtaxed and the nervous system of the lumbar region (the loins) is disturbed. Thus the power of motion of the hind legs is lost.

How to Tell Good Oats.

Good oats are clean, hard, dry, sweet, heavy, plump, full of flour, and rattle like shot. They have a clean and almost metallic luster. Each oat in a well-grown sample is nearly of the same size. There are but few small or imperfect grains. The hard pressure of the nail on an oat should leave little or no mark. The kernel when pressed between the teeth should clip rather than tear. The skin should be thin. The size of the kernel will be less in proportion than the skin is thick. The color of the oat is not very material, but white oats are generally thinner in the skin than black. Again, black oats will grow on inferior soils. Short, plump oats are preferable to large, long grains. Bearded oats must have an excess of husk. Oats are not necessarily bad because they are thin-skinned or bearded; but they must contain a less amount of flour per bushel than thin-skinned oats without beards.

Doctor Macadam used to tell of a tipsy Scotchman making his way home on a bright Sunday morning when the good folks were wending their way to the kirk. A little dog pulled a ribbon from the hand of a lady who was leading it, and as it ran from her, she appealed to the first passer-by, who happened to be the inebriate, asking him to whistle to her poodle. "Woman," he retorted, with that solemnity of visage which only a Scotchman can assume—"woman, this is no day for whustlin'!"

A young Frenchman named Ti was recently sentenced at Pari imprisonment for defrauding sev persons. He protested that he innocent, but his accusers swore his identity. The next day anot man was before the court on a simi charge. He presented so wonder a resemblance to Tiquet that magistrate determined to investig and the result was that Tiquet w found to be innocent, and that th fraud was perpetrated by his unknown double.

No succulent food is more greedily eaten by pigs at any age than beets. They may be fed any time from the first thinnings during the growing season to the fully grown roots in Winter. They are especially valuable as a part of the Winter food for breeding sows, and some beets should always be saved for that purpose.

An English guide, while showing the beauties of the little town of Saltaire, where no liquor is allowed to be sold, explained that the "rate of morality" was remarkably high while that of mortality was very low, being about thirteen to the thousand.

A bunch of dates that weighed thirty-five pounds was picked on a ranch at Winters, Cal., recently. The owner set out a few trees as an experiment twenty-five years ago, and they have been bearing for ten years.

Prof. Max Muller in a recent lecture at Oxford, England, on the science of language, expressed the opinion that if language were taken away man would be lower than the dumb animals of the field and forest.

It has been found that a goose can stand the weather until the thermometer goes to 64 below zero. Then her feathers won't save her. Wild ducks can go twelve degrees lower and come out on top.

A good rule for poultrymen to follow is to give good food, pure water, plenty of exercise, free ventilation, and keep the poultry house clean, dry and comfortable.

A plot of rye sown now will give excellent green food for poultry just before winter and early in spring, besides being a good fertilizer to turn under late in spring.

Statistics show that the consumption of alcohol in France doubled between 1875 and 1885.

Want of work does not drive men to drink as often as drink drives men to want of work.

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE

FOR 1890.

BEST AND CHEAPEST.

THE BEST STORIES—Our stories and novelets are from some of the most popular authors, and are admitted to be the best published. For 1890, such writers as Mrs. Lucy H. Hooper, Alice Bowman, Frank Lee Benedict, Alice Maud Ewell, Ella Higginson, Howard Seeley, and others will contribute some of their best productions. Eight novelets and nearly one hundred short stories will be given during the year.

THE BEST HOUSEHOLD DEPARTMENT—embracing articles on health, nursing the sick, home dressmaking, the garden, kitchen, and other subjects invaluable in every household.

THE BEST FASHION DEPARTMENT—giving the latest and choicest styles of dress for outdoor and house wear, fully described, illustrated by handsome Colored Fashion-Plates and numerous wood-engravings. Also a full-size Dress-Pattern monthly.

THE BEST FANCY-WORK PATTERNS—many of them printed in colors—embracing the newest and most popular designs produced at home and abroad.

THE BEST STEEL-ENGRAVINGS—"Peterson" is now the only magazine giving these, the finest of all engravings.

THE CHEAPEST—as no other magazine gives so much of interest and variety for the same money. Its price is within the reach of everybody.
