Efforts by John L. Lewis to organize dairy farmers into the coal miners union has apparently hit another snag. Recently when the C. I. O., of which he and his miners are no longer a part, disapproved the plan. The Transcript has on numerous occasions published articles and has editorially opposed the farm labor organizations at a time when utmost production is needed with a very limited supply of labor and when no more labor headaches are needed. The following editorial appeared in the Christian Science Monitor, one of the nation's leading dailies:

Effort to organize dairy farmers into labor unions has, fortunately, just hit a new bump. This surprising venture of organized labor into agriculture originated with John L. Lewis. While he and his union of coal miners remained within the Congress of Industrial Organizations, skeptical fellowmembers of the C. I. O. could do no more than shrug their shoulders. But now that he is out, one of the first things the national C. I. O. convention does is to disavow his attempt to unionize a major branch of farming.

Thus the C. I. O. comes to the same ground by another route that the American Federation of Labor reached earlier. The scheme of organizing dairy farmers was first presented to the A. F. of L. The older labor body turned it down because the dairy farmers include many employers of labor. As an organization of workers, the A. F. of L. did not think it fit to unionize employers.

That was sensible and so was the C. I. O.'s decision of this week —that it is best for the farmers and the workers to stick to their separate organizations and co-operate. Friction on the farmer's side, always latent in regard to city labor, has been intensified. If the Lewis drive goes on and aggravates farmers, labor stands a chance of losses in favorable legislation, if reaction comes.

By the C. I. O.'s rebuff, Mr. Lewis is left to go it alone. He is used to playing single-handed for the biggest gains. By his sole effort he has obtained some of organized labor's principal advances. But when he took the coal miners' union into dairy farming, he slipped. There will be better feeling and a more permanent solution of the dairy farmers' problems if trade unions take care of their own, and let agriculture continue to handle the tasks it has been working on long before many of today's labor unions were born.

The un-announced blackout, Monday evening,the first that this community has experienced, was a decided success as far as Chestertown is concerned. Even the Kent Defense and Vita Food, both working on vital war needs, were darkened with prepared blackout equipment. A survey of the town showed that the local civilian defense organization is ready at all times to function efficiently If the blackouts are designed only for the towns and cities, very little additional practice is needed. If it is supposed to be countywide, some more efficient control of the rural areas is needed. Those beyond the hearing of the urban air raid alarms are without knowledge of the blackout except those who can be personally reached by the rural wardens. This, in a short time, is almost impossible and if a darkened rural section is necessary for protection from enemy bombings a more adequate system is needed. The suggestion at a recent meeting by a rural warden that some telephone signal might be developed on rural lines, although scoffed at by those in command of the State defense organization, may be a good idea. It could at least warn those rural dwellers who have telephones in their homes. These people could then help spread the alarm to their neighbors. Last Monday night lights burned brightly in rural homes in many parts of the county. If it was not a county wide alarm, everything was as it should have been but if the county was included there will be lots of beacons, to bllaze the trail of enemy bombers that fly in from the Atlantic coast

Appearing in this issue is a letter from the Federal Office of Censorship, Washington, in which attention is called as to the value of certain information to the enemy during war time. Most information as to the activities of individual soldiers and sailors is welcomed as moral builders to both the service men and those back home. The connection of names of men in combat areas with their regiments or ships may be of great value to the enemy. It means in many cases that by following the location of the individual soldier or sailor, spies can locate and determine movements of armies or fleets. It is the purpose of this paper to cooperate in every way with the war effort and therefore will endeavor to comply with the recent request. The public at large can also help by with-holding the above mentioned information. This does not mean that one should not talk about the boys in the service, it does request, however, that mention of divisions and ships should not be broadcast.

Over the Top by New Year's Is the Plea of Secretary Morgenthau

November 13, 1942

As of today twenty-one million American workers are investing eight per cent of their salary - every pay day - in United States War Savings Bonds. This is a very remarkable tribute to our armed forces who are fighting this war. But this job is only two-thirds accomplished.

There are nine million additional American workers who are not investing in War Bonds every pay day.

This appeal is directed to two groups of Americans:

First - the twenty-one million people who are investing eight per cent of their wages. We ask them to increase their investment to ten per cent or more.

Second - the other nine million whom we ask to join the Payroll Savings Plan and to invest ten per cent or more of their earnings.

It is our earnest hope here at the Treasury Department that by New Year's Day thirty million Americans will be investing ten per cent or more of their wages in War Bonds through the Payroll Savings Plan.

Henry Morgenthau Jr.
SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

D. A. R. Meeting

Miss Mary Caldwell entertained the London Bridge Chapter, Daughters of American Revolution, Tuesday November 10, at her home on Washington avenue. After a very delicious dinner served to the members, a business meeting was held. An interesting discussion centered about the newspaper reports, Mrs. Walter Gould had brought from Chicago where she had attended the National meeting held there in May. Although late in being reviewed, they were very enjoyable to hear.

Letters To The Editor

Editor Transcript,
Chestertown, Maryland.
Dear Sir:

Enemy agents keep constant watch over newspapers in the United States. They are especially interested in items which disclose the identity of military units which have gone overseas, items such as the one we noticed in a recent issue of an Eastern Shore paper reporting the promotion of a Maryland soldier stationed in England—which was proper—but also disclosing that he is a member of "Headquarters Company, 115th Infantry, 29th Divison."

For this reason, we are writing to all Eastern Shore editors enclosing the Code of Wartime Practices for the American Press. Under the "Troops" clause, you will note that newspapers are requested to avoid identifying the military units of men stationed in combat areas, or linking sailors with their ships.

May we have your cooperation?

Sincerely yours,
N. R. Howard
Assistant Director, Office of Censorship, Washington, D. C.
