Bruin's Cross Now.

The Philadelphia Telegraph says: "An effort on the part of the Polar bear to digest a box of French shoe-blacking has aroused a speculative interest in the minds of the keepers of the Zoo. Nearly all shoe-blacking contains sulphuric acid, as the ingredient which causes the paste to dry and glisten when rubbed with a brush. Although sulphuric acid is sometimes administered in extremely dilluted compounds to the diseased human economy, its effect upon the interior of a Polar bear has never been conclusively shown by experiment of absorbing interest. The bear is still living, although from the general way he deports himself, there is a suspicion that he wishes he was not living.

The keepers have found that the blacking was thrown into the cage with a vicious motive by an Italian boot-black who went into the garden to shine shoes contrary to the regulations and was stopped by the keepers. When he left the garden he revenged himself by giving the bear the box of blacking.

The bear rolled the box about and finally worked the lid off. Then he smelled it with manifest signs of an appetite, and, feeling quite positive that it was a palatable and delicious substance of food, he dug out small chunks and ate them. His eyes snapped with approval, and he was having a regular picnic when he was discovered and a frantic effort was made by the keepers to dislodge the box from the cage.

Long bars, sticks and everything else that could be stuck in between the bars were used with dexterity and desperate perseverance until the bear was driven at bay and the mischievious box secured. Around the mouth the bear began to resemble a black bear, and his teeth looked as if they had been carbonized. He howled resentfully at the way he had been despoiled of the only delicacy and variety of food he had known during the monotony of his captivity. A little later on he grew quieter and more serious. He appeared to be buried in abstract contemplation.

Occasionally he would shake himself and throw out an expression from his eye that was very ugly. He grunted and swore—at least he made sounds in accent, with accompanying looks and gesture, that corresponded closely with an explosion of profanity from the human breast. The keepers tried to comfort him, and were filled with anxious solicitude for his future. He got over it slowly. Now he is considerably better, and on a fair road to recovery. His experience has developed an ineffaceable suspicion that he was betrayed, that he was victimized by a cowardly, degraded and contemptible imposition, and while the internal fires are fed by this burning consciousness of abuse, it is better to keep away from him. For some time to come patrons of the Zoo will be warned not to approach the Polar bear's cage, and naturalists will find an interesting new channel of research founded upon the chemical combination of vitriol and carbonized bone with the digestive fluids of a bear.

In the new process for spinning and weaving glass into cloth the warp is composed of silk forming the body and groundwork on which the pattern in glass appears. Not less than fifty to sixty of the original glass strands are required to form one thread of the weft, and not more than a yard of the cloth can be produced in twelve hours.

Ancient Romans made no bones about eating food with their fingers. Neither do modern Americans when they have a tidbit of quail, reed bird or other small game, but people of every nationality ought to draw the line at a turkey drumstick.

Moralists assert there is no call for strong language in the needs of society or nature. If this is the case how is a man to do justice to the situation when his favorite corn is trodden upon by a wretch weighing half a ton? or rather, how are people to drive mules?

Northern manufacturers are interested in the statement that the finest brick made in the South are from the refuse of slate quarries. They have a double resisting power and absorb only one-third as much water as ordinary brick.

With a woman it is a struggle to provide something for the inner man, and with a man it is an effort to provide something for the outer woman.

There was a man sent to the Kansas penitentiary once who was such a natural thief, that he watched his chance and stole away.

Every straw stack that is not properly capped and well made is liable to injury before the winter is over.
