Oysters on Trees.

Business recently called me to Honduras, and I have just now returned well pleased with my trip. I had often heard of oysters growing on trunks and branches of trees—groves of living, green, umbrageous trees, with oysters growing upon them—and my friend and I set aside the day to investigate the fact

Our dory cut the water like a knife, and slipped along rapidly and easily, with hardly a ripple in her wake, and in about half an hour we had left the sight of the town, with its convent, and shipping, and soldiers' barracks, behind us. We were then nearly abreast of an island called Moho Cave.

The front of it is embowered in graceful cocoanut trees, and the back part trends off into swamp and is covered with a dense growth of the red mangrove. This mangrove tree grows in either fresh or salt water swamps, and even in water three or four feet deep.

The limbs of the trees send shoots or roots down into water, and thus a thicket of mangroves is a matted mass of trunks and limbs and roots. On these trunks and limbs and roots, deep down under the water, cling bunches of single oysters, and thus are formed the oyster groves I had heard of. The leaves of these trees are of a beautiful dark green, and the swamp islands, from a distance, look like fairy bowers.

We poled our dory around to the south of the island, but could not get very near, as we were scraping bottom all the time.

We passed over numerous oyster beds, and, while doing so, and with an ordinary rake which had been provided, we hauled aboard a lot of the oysters.

They were small and flat, and the shell looked more like a flat clam than an oyster. But the inside tasted all right, and our boatman swallowed that down with a relish. I did not care much for them myself, except as curiosities, for the mud that stuck to them did not smell appetizing.

Keep a Clear Head.

It is worthy of note that the two principal labor leaders in Europe and America—Burns in England and Powderly in the United States—are advocates of teetotalism. Burns neither drinks nor smokes. He is a member of the London County Council. He is a trained athlete and a leading cricketer. His physical health and clear head enabled him to bear up under the fearful strain of a month's strike and conduct a hundred thausand men to victory. One of the most distinguished journalists in America said not long since that when he started in his profession he began, as many others did, by taking frequent alcoholic drinks and ale and beer with his luncheon. "I had laid out a great deal of work for myself in my life,' he said. "I soon found that if I accomplished it I must give up drinking, and I did so. The boys—those who started with me and kept up the drinking habit—are now nearly all dead or broken down." This is the testimony of one who, though middle aged, probably can still do more writing in an hour and stick to it more hours than any other journalist living. It is indeed the universal testimony that he who rises from the ranks, whether in a trade or profession, is the man who keeps his head clear and his nerves steady and strong by Temperance. If at the same time he can manage to keep a sunny temper, his chances for success are doubled.

Cutting Stone by Wire.

In the well known marble quarries at Traigneaux, Belgium, the operation of cutting is performed, in an efficiet and satisfactory manner, by the aid of mild steel wires. A cord barely one-quarter inch diameter is made to travel at the rate of about thirteen feet per second, while the diameter is reduced, and speed slightly increased as the length of cut increases for subdivisions of the blocks. The twist of the cord causes it while running to turn upon itself, thus becoming worn evenly over its whole surface, and on its becoming so worn as to be incapable of carrying along the sand and water, it may still be used for fencing, and for a variety of purposes. It is stated also, that before being worn out a cord of 150 yards long is capable of cutting to a depth of nearly seventy feet in fifteen feet blocks, or of producing nearly 500 square feet of sawn surface in marble. In a block of marble fifteen feet long the rate of cut is four inches per hour, and in granite about one inch.

Judge. "The prisoner denies having created any disturbance as stated by you."

Indignant witness (a night watchman.) "But, your Honor, if he didn't raise the biggest kind of a disturbance how did I come to wake up?"

A Michigan widow killed three birds with one stone by inserting in the same issue of an Adrian daily her husband's obituary notice, a card of thanks, and a notice that she would auction off her late partner's personal effects.
