ON THE SCREEN AT THE NEW LYCEUM

Gay, hilarious enchanting, with a plot that's fast-moving and packed with surprises, "I Married A Witch" the Rene Clair comedy-romance will be shown on Mon.-Tues.-Wed., Dec. 28-29-30 at the New Lyceum Theatre thru United Artists release. Frederic March and Veronica Lake are the starring team of this charming and different comedy, and Robert Benchley, Susan Hayward, and Cecil Kellaway featured players.

The gifted Rene Clair has taken an honest-to-goodness witch-tale brought it down to modern times, streamlined it, and left out the shuddering horors.

Veronica Lake, first seen as a smoky spirit traveling through space with her sorcerer-father Cecil Kellaway, gets a body in order to perform some nasty witchcraft aimed against the hero Frederic March, and intended to keep him from becoming governor of the state—and from marrying his sweetheart Susan Hayward.

One of the funniest scenes in the picture is the wedding of March and Hayward in which the two march to the altar three times, but don't get married. It's witchcraft at its howlingest!

The witch gets her man, but not before she drinks a love potion intended for him, which makes her fall terribly in love with the man she wanted to destroy. It's romance at its best between March and Lake, and the humor is beautifully taken care of by Benchley and Kellaway. Veronica's magic ability to show up when and where she's least expected is enough to provoke screams. There are surprises aplenty in store for you when you see "I Married A Witch," but this reviewer hestitates to tell more and spoil them.

Too much praise cannot be given to the superb cast headed by March and Lake, nor to Rene Clair for giving us one of the most unusual and delightful comedies seen on the screen in many a day.

The Truth Will Out

Soldiers are sometimes given to overstatement. But the truth will out. A soldier at camp in the East was returning from a company softball game the other day. He burst into his quarters exclaiming excitedly: "We thrashed them, annihilated them, massacred them!" Then he added in a subdued voice, "But they had all the breaks—and we lost!"

Bridge Sandwiches

1 cup canned tomato soup
1 cup water
1 tablespoon gelatin
2 large sour pickles
½ cup pimentos
1-3 cup chopped nuts
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup chopped pecans

Put the gelatin to soak in one-fourth cup of water. Mix soup with three-fourths cup water, and bring to boil, Add the soaked gelatin, the pickles, finely chopped, pimentos nuts and salt. Pour into shallow pan so that it will harden in a sheet three-fourths inch thick. Cut in squares and place between thin slices of buttered bread. Or it may be allowed to harden in a bowl and be spread when needed.

PRUNE—CHEESE SANDWICHES

1 cup copped cooked prunes
1 cake cream cheese
1-3 cup chopped nut meats

Mix and spread between thin slices of white or graham bread.

Successful Sandwiches

For delicacy, there is probably nothing to compare with sandwiches made with various butters. These are made by merely blending some tasty substance into butter and perhaps adding a little cream. This type sandwiches are exceptionally fine for afternoon teas, being simple to make and suited to quantity production.

Here are several different butters that will go in combination and make a fine assortment:

Cheese Butter—Mix thoroughly 2 tablespoons of butter, ½ tablespoons of cream cheese, 1 teaspoon cream, 1 teaspoon mayonnaise and pepper to be added if desired.

Bacon Butter—Fry bacon crisp and pound to a taste or put through a food chopper. Work into butter in desired proportions. To two tablespoons of this paste add one teaspoon horseradish or mustard.

Egg Butter—Devil the yolks of three hard-boiled eggs and work into two tablespoons of butter. Makes six sandwiches.

Mint Butter—Cream half a cup of butter, adding a little whipped cream Work in two tablespoons finely chopped mint. Parsley or anchovy paste may be substituted for the mint.
