The Treasury System of the United States.

L. E. Chittenden, in Harpers' Magazine for July, says: No nation has a better Treasury system than the United States. When its regulations are enforced, it practically guarantees the government against loss by error or fraud. It involves the division of the department into bureaus, each directly responsible to the Secretary, having little connection with each other, and at least three of which must approve a claim before it can be paid, each thus acting as a check upon the other. It recognizes the fact that the subordinates in a bureau, subject to removal by its chief, will obey the orders of that chief, although they may involve a violation of law, so that checks within a bureau are unreliable. But if the payment of a claim requires an examination by three persons in as many bureaus, and the approval of the heads of each, a conspiracy to defraud becomes difficult and practically impossible. Frauds upon the Treasury proper have been extremely rare. The Assistant Treasuries are abnormal growths not subject to these checks, and frauds upon them involving large losses have consequently been common. The manufacture and issue of the postal and fractional currency was another excrescence permitted to attach itself to the system, and the account of that issue cannot be verified. It was the only issue of the war about which there existed any doubt. It may be correct, but it is quite possible that some millions of dollars of that currency more than the amount shown by the books of the Treasurer were put in circulation.

It might have been done without detection, for the white paper was turned into money ready for issue by a single department, under a single head, without supervision or the cooperation of any other department or person.

Originally adapted to an expenditure of $25,000,000 per annum, the Treasury system had the capacity of indefinite expansion without impairing its security. In March, 1861, it regulated an expenditure averaging about $8,000,000 per month. Within sixty days it increased to more than $2,000,000 per day, and ultimately to more than $1,000,000,000 per annum. Yet the system required no change except an increase of clerical force. Thus it happened that during four years of war more than $3,000,000,000, was received and covered into the Treasury, and an equal value of securities issued and delivered to those who were entitled to receive them, without the loss of one dollar by error or fraud. This statement rests upon absolute demonstration, and not upon evidence alone. The amount is as far as infinity beyond ordinary human comprehension. The statement and the system which verifies it are wonders of finance in a country convulsed by civil war.

The Treasury was the creation of Alexander Hamilton. It will live as long as the nation exists, and every one who comprehends it will accept it as a monument of the financial ability of its author. It may be criticised by those who do not understand it as an institution of red tape, but no experienced Treasury officer ever advised the removal of one of its checks, or the relaxation of one of its stringent provisions.

A Legal Bed of Roses.

The justices of the supreme court are not to be blamed if they are vain. All day long they sit upon the grandest throne in the United States, surrounded by more show of deference and honor than even the President receives, with theatrical curtains of crimson silk draped behind them and a great gold eagle over their heads, with page boys at their elbow, venerable lawyers bowing before them, velvet carpets to hush the fall of feet upon the court room floor, negro doorkeepers watching over noiseless doors, a dim religious light in the semi-circular room, and a never ceasing throng of awed citizens of this and other lands reverentially staring them out of countenance. The Libyan lion at a circus excites very little more veneration and awe from the spectators. I should think that the justices must feel sometimes how like wild beasts on exhibition they are. Perhaps they don't think of it at all, for one grows accustomed in time to anything, even to being a supreme court judge.

The Oldest Preacher.

Rev. John Atkinson, the oldest living preacher in the United States, and, as Bishop Merrill says, perhaps the oldest preacher in the world, lives in an old-fashioned country house near Benton Harbor, Mich. He was born in September, 1797, at Flemington, N. J., and was licensed to preach on the 14th of August, 1814. Rev. Atkinson was converted the last Sunday in September, 1810, which makes him nearly eighty years in the church.

Father Atkinson enjoys life keenly and says he would like to see the new century come in if it be the Lord's will. He reads the newspapers, and is watchful of the progress of all political and social events.
