A Peculiarity of Celluloid.

Insurance men say that when they are called upon to adjust a loss caused by the burning of celluloid they are absolutely compelled to take the books of the owners unless they have evidence to show that the books have been made up fraudulently. When a piece of celluloid burns up every thing that is in it passes away into the air and disappears. The substance is made under patents owned by an American company, and it is composed principally of camphor. A gentleman connected with the company which manufactures all the celluloid articles sold in this market and furnishes the bulk of all that are sold the world over says that the product of the company's factory last year was valued at $1,500,000. "Suppose now," said the person making this statement, "that our factory should burn, or that the store in which we keep much of our finished product should burn, there would not be in either case any means by which the insurance company could determine, independently of us, whether we had sustained a loss of a hundred dollars on celluloid or of a hundred thousand dollars."

A Florist makes the assertion that a blue rose is impossible; but while an explanation of this fact may be impossible, he fails to mention a very interesting law which governs the coloring of all flowers. A knowledge of this law would save many a flower grower hours of unavailing and foolish hope. The law is simply this: the colors, red, blue and yellow, never all appear in the same species; any two may exist, but never the third. Thus we have the red and yellow roses, but no blue; red and blue verbenas, but no yellow; yellow and blue in the various members of the viola family (as pansies, for instance), but no red; red and yellow gladoli, but no blue; red and yellow chrysanthemums, but no blue; and so on through a list which the space of a column in your paper would not admit.

It is a curious fact that some men would rather make five dollars by trading horses than twenty-five dollars by housing farming implements.

A good deal of energy is fooled away in getting up satistics that never do anybody any good. As, for example, think of the amount of figuring necessary to make known the fact that there is one lawn-mower in this country for each thirty-seven persons, when you found it out long ago without putting a pencil to paper, if you have a machine of your own and live in a neighborhood where grass abounds.

A distinctive feature of insects of the grasshopper family is the manner in which they produce sound. The sharp, stridulating noise with which the air resounds all through the day and far into the midsummer night is produced by the rubbing of the stiff edges of the wing covers against the basal joint of the hindmost pair of legs; or, in some species, by rubbing the edges of the wings against each other.

A man in Iowa follows the cruel trade of a professional bird catcher for his living. He says the redbird is greatly in demand, being under contract to deliver very shortly 600 to a wholesale millinery house. Sentiment at one time seemed strong enough to kill the fashion of using birds as ornaments. It is a pitiful thing that women should encourage such cruelty.

The largest tree in the world, according to the statistics lately published by the Italian government, is a monster chestnut standing at the foot of Mount Ætna. The circumference of the main trunk at sixty feet from the ground is 212 feet.

One hundred dollars' worth of cheese takes from the farm less than one-seventh the fertility taken by $100 worth of grain, while $100 worth of butter—if the skim milk be fed on the farm—takes nothing from the soil.

A correspondent of the Massachusetts Ploughman says that a quart of vinegar in half a pail of water, if thoroughly sprinkled over the interior of a henhouse, will free it from lice when whitewashing and other remedies have failed.

It is a bad plan to waste food by throwing it on the floor instead of feeding in troughs or some other vessel; also, to cram fifty cents' worth of drugs down the throat of a sick chicken that wouldn't be worth even a quarter if it was well.

The Mexicans and Indians in Texas say that every animal has brains enough to tan its own skin, and so the latter, in the case of the the wolf, panther, wild cat and some other animals, is mainly prepared by rubbing into the flesh side of it the brains of its former wearer.

A cow that has to get her living by gnawing the parched pasture, under an August sun, without other feed, is not likely to make a great show at the pail.
