the CONSERVATION WAY

Farming is a way of life. Conservation is a way of farming; it is a sensible way of doing the farming job and above all "Conservation Farming Pays."

Conservation farming pays not only in saving the soil but it also pays in cash returns. It gives order to farming practices; it balances the farm program; it uses each acre on the farm for crops best adapted to each acre; it is insurance against soil erosion and loss from washed out crops the same as fire insurance protects one from fire losses with this one difference, erosion control makes loss improbably before the dashing rains come while fire insurance pays cash only after the damage has been done.

The Supervisors of the Kent and Queen Anne's Soil Conservation District urge all farmers to at least give Conservation Farming a chance to prove its worth.

Each farm is a problem unto itself and only after a plan has been made, submitted to the farmer, and studied in its entirety can a farmer really get the whole picture.

Every farm in these two Eastern Shore counties can improve its farming practices, along conservation lines, in one way or another and, in most cases, without a great deal of change.

The Supervisors stand willing and ready to help. They can do no more.

Malarial Sites

Malaria occurs where the warmth and the dampness permit the right kind of mosquitoes to develop and where there are human beings with malaria from whom the mosquitoes may carry the infection to other people. In some counties in the United States the rates have been reported as up to 100 for each 100,000 people.

Square the Circle

The technical explanation of the impossibility of constructing a circle of the same area as a given square is that pi, by which the area of a circle is determined, will never come out even but will always be 3.1416 plus. Scholars in classical times learned it was impossible to "square the circle" but perhaps the first reference to this fact in English was made in 1624 by John Donne.

"First Lady" Of Maryland Featured In Cotton Series

Memphis, Tenn.—(Special)—Mrs. Herbert R. O'Conor, wife of the Governor of Maryland, joins the American Cotton Industry's "First Lady" portrait parade this month. Twenty-second in a series of portrait presentations sponsored by the National Cotton Council and the Cotton Textile Institute, this striking photograph of Mrs. O'Conor and her daughter, Patricia, will appear in full-page size in one of the nation's leading fashion magazines.

Designed to present the finest of cottons in the finest of surroundings, the portrait shows Mrs. O'Conor and Patricia wearing charming suits of cotton taffeta, designed especially for them by Kraus of Zuckerman and Kraus, one of the nation's foremost stylists. The portrait was made in the stately Government House at Annapolis by Wynn Richards of New York, outstanding illustrative photographer. Copies of the portrait have been distributed widely by the Council and Institute, and will appear in many of the nation's leading newspapers within a few days.

Commenting on her selection of cottons for the portrait, Mrs. O'Conor said:

"Suits and dresses of cotton form an increasingly important part of our wardrobes. We find them smart and practical, and a real boon in these busy days."

The portrait series has attracted the praise of fashion authorities from coast to coast.

Most Have Used Cars

Most of the car-owning families in the United States have never purchased a new car. They depend upon second, third or fourth-hand cars for their transportation.

Time to Lime

Limestone may be put onto meadow stubble any time after the hay crop has been harvested and before the land is plowed for a cultivated crop the following spring.

Washable Wall Paper

Washable papers are cleaned satisfactorily by wiping them with a cloth wrung out of clear lukewarm soft water and drying with a clean cloth. Use water sparingly so that paper will not absorb it. Many washable papers of firm quality may be cleaned with soap jelly and a sponge or cloth. Use light, even strokes. Rinse with sponge wrung out of clear warm soft water.

Chinese Oil

With regard to oil, the Chinese geological survey, in 1934, estimated that China proper had a known reserve of over 2 billion barrels. There were also 2 billion barrels of mineral oil in Manchuria. The national total, therefore, was over 4 billion barrels. This estimate, however, is very conservative as the important Kansu and Sinkiang reserves are not included.
