DEATHS

EUGENE NEWMAN

The funeral of Aviation MM 3-c Eugene Sutton Newman, U. S. Navy, 19-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Newman, of Massey, Friday, attended by numerous former schoolmates, friends and relatives, was one of the largest held here in many years.

Young Newnam, better known as "Shorty," was one of the two Navy fliers killed when a Douglas dive bomber crashed during a routine mission near Duvall, Washington on Wednesday, Jan. 10. Draped in an American flag, his remains had been escorted home by his shipmate and crew member, Myron E. Stouffer, ARM 3-c of New York City.

A 1942 graduate of the Galena High School, he had completed with high standing his courses in radar, aerial gunnery, radio and mechanics, and also had established a superior average as an aerial marksman. He had won the wings of a combat air crewman and was en route to active combat duty in the Pacific when the crash, cause of which is unknown, occurred. Ensign Clayton C. Delk of Lynwood, Calif., was the other victim of the crash.

GREAT PLANS FOR AVIATION SEEN BY O'CONOR

Annapolis, January 23: Declaring that "in the post-war world. . . no single factor will be of greater importance than Aviation," Governor Herbert R. O'Conor has proposed to the General Assembly that a chain of airfields be set up throughout the State. In a special message to the Legislature last night, Governor O'Conor outlined the present policies of the State with regard to aviation and stated that legislation would be submitted to that body to implement and further the program.

"In many respects," Governor O'Conor told the General Assembly, "our State is ideally situated and in a position to avail of the broad possibilities in the future expansion of Aeronautics. Our strategic location, with ready access to ocean and coastwise air transportation, situated at the threshold of the Nation's capital, the center of its military and governmental activities, has already resulted in important developments respecting Aviation which are of great significance.

"Our Army and Navy have selected the State already for the location of air bases, the dimensions of which are staggering and beyond the knowledge of a great majority of our own citizens. The huge Martin and Fairchild factories near Baltimore and Hagerstown, particularly, have brought a concentration of effort on the part of many thousands of people upon the use of the airplane. Not only can our State benefit, in the post-war period, from the establishments already in existence, but by the development and expansion of projects already underway, Maryland can forge ahead in the aeronautical world in a manner which will be of lasting benefit to the State. Commercial air transport and private flying will be the order of the day in the post-war period.

"In this latter connection the recently-announced plans for research at the University of Maryland, with the initial gift of $1,700,000.00 from the Glenn L. Martin Company, is to be borne in mind. Proceeding from our plans for the University project, Maryland can become one of the leading centers of Aeronautics in the entire world.

"It was with this general purpose in mind that I undertook the reorganization of our State Aviation Commission some time ago and I am pleased to report to you that the Commission is now well-established and functioning satisfactorily under the Chairmanship of Mr. Charles H. Buck, of Baltimore City. The Commission will need further legislation to enable it to fulfill its responsibilities, especially in view of contemplated action of the Congress of the United States.'

Governor O'Conor summarized the State's program as one which would provide: Immediate facilities for planning airfields in different parts of the State and construction of landing strips at convenient locations on the State's highway network.

Means for matching Federal funds, possibly from revenue of the State Roads Commission on the theory that airfields are a part of the transportation system.

Authority for the State Aviation Commission to assume jurisdiction over aviation projects throughout the State and be the final authority on the expenditure of State aviation funds, as well as agent for handling of Federal funds.

An intra-State aerial system so planned as to link Eastern and Western Shore communities by regular air schedules.

A State policy that would encourage airlines to give Maryland fullest consideration by elimination of unnecessary regulations and restrictions.

Tax policies that will not prove restrictive to airline development.

Authority for the State Aviation Commission to negotiate with national and international airlines for increased service to local fields.

"I cannot emphasize too strongly," the Governor declared, "that any error of judgment in not perceiving the unlimited possibilities of Aviation may result in severe financial losses to our State and to its people."
