Her First Caller.

Some years ago Amelia Simpson, a maiden lady of mature years moved into a new England village to take possession of a small property that had been left her by her deceased uncle.

Miss Simpson was a city spinster, and it happened that while moving into her new home she made some derisive remarks about the village, which remarks reached the ears of the villagers. It was before the days of boycotting, but the spirit of that method existed, and so unanimous were the feelings against the newcomer that not a soul in the village called upon her.

The lady herself was unconscious that she had offended and made several advances in the direction of forming an acquaintance with her neighbors, but was met with cool non-recognition every time.

Then she withdrew herself from any communication with the people, bought all supplies at the neighboring town, and lived alone with a female servant for a score of years. At the end of that time she was taken very ill. A doctor was summoned from a distance by her faithful attendant, and he soon knew that all remedies were useless, and it only remained for him to tell poor Miss Simpson that her earthly pilgrimage was nearly over. This he did in his own way. He was a physician of the old school, and he approached the subject courteously.

"Madam," he said, in a grave, deliberate voice, "I have done all that I possibly can do in your case to insure return of health, but without avail. It only remains for me to inform you that death has called."

Poor Miss Simpson raised herself on her pillow with a smile of satisfaction.

"Show him up," she said, with shining eyes. "I have lived in this inhospitable place for twenty years, and he is the first caller I ever had."

And she sank back with a peaceful look on her composed features.

A Cunning Financier.

During the revolutionary period in Paris in 1848 a committee of seven communists called at the Rothschild establishment and demanded to see the famous banker. Rothschild appeared, as suave as you please. "Pray be seated, gentlemen," said he, "and now what can I do for you?"

"Rothschild," said the chairman of the committee, "our time has come at last. The people are triumphant—the commune is on top."

"Good for the people—vive la commune!" cried Rothschild, gleefully.

"The time has come," continued the chairman of the committee, "when each must share equally with his fellow-citizens. We have been delegated to call upon you and inform you that you must share your enormous wealth with your countrymen.

"If it is so decreed," said Rothschild, urbanely, "I shall cheerfully comply. At how much is my fortune estimated?"

"At 200,000,000 francs," replied the leader, boldly.

"And at what is the population of France estimated?" asked Rothschild.

"We figure it at 50,000,000," was the answer.

"Well, then," said Rothschild, "It would appear that I owe each of my countrymen about four francs. Now, here, gentlemen," he continued, putting his hand in his pocket and producing a lot of silver, "here are twenty-eight francs for you. I have paid each of you, have I not? Please give me your receipt therefor; and so, good-day to you."

The committee retired, and the commune never pestered the wary financier again.

The method prescribed for cleaning brass and in use in all the United States arsenals is claimed to be the best in the world. The plan is to make a mixture of one part common nitric acid and one-half pint sulphuric acid in a stone jar, having also ready a pail of fresh water and a box of sawdust. The articles to be treated are dipped into the acid, thrown into the water and finally rubbed with sawdust. This changes them into a brilliant color immediately. If the brass has become greasy it is first dipped in a strong solution of potash and soda in warm water; this cuts the grease so that the acid has full power to act.

An instrument has recently been exhibited in London by which a photograph can be taken of drops of water in the course of their formation. It consists of a lantern and lenses, by which a water trough, the source of the drops, can be strongly illuminated, together with a lightning camera having a revolving dish with one perforation.

I. N. Blankinship, of Marion, Mass., has a clock which was made in 1732. The works are of brass, and the clock keeps as good time as did when it was made, 158 years ago, but the accounts vary as to the kind of time it kept in 1732.
