A Curious Story of a Frog.

In a tank in the museum of the New York hospital, tells a correspondent in Harper's Young People, were kept a frog, seven turtles and a young alligator, the latter being about ten inches long. This mixed family got along very smoothly during the winter. The frog perched himself on the top of a piece of wood that floated in the tank. At night the little turtles and the baby alligator would settle themselves beside the frog, and slip into the water again for the day. During the entire winter the frog never moved, but sprawled on the stick, his eyes pointing straight up; nor did he all the time taste a morsel of food. But toward the end of May he slipped from the bit of wood, and took his place at the bottom of the tank. Shortly after this, one of the hospital officials looked into the tank, and found there only six turtles instead of seven. Each day there was one less, until only one turtle remained. At this point a watch was kept, and this is what was seen:

The frog was in his place, perfectly motionless, and the turtle was going round and round looking for its lost friends. At last it went over to where the frog lay, and settled itself for the night. Then the frog was seen to give a bound swift as lightning, and to compose himself again in his motionless attitude. But no turtle was to be seen. The frog had fairly jumped outside of the turtle. Nothing now remained except the frog and the alligator. One morning it was discovered that the alligator was missing. "There," said some one, "the frog isn't the thief this time, that's sure." "Isn't he, though?" replied Prof. Ferguson. "Look here!" There was the frog, sitting back, and contorted in the most comical way. Out of his mouth hung about two inches of the alligator's tail and part of the head. He had with nice precision seized it by the middle when it was performing some graceful curve.

Prof. Newcomb's Bad Break.

Prof. Simon Newcomb, of Washington, is known as a man whose scientific studies have tended to exaggerate a natural disposition to mental abstraction. The professor's friends, who are also his strong admirers, understand his peculiarity, and overlook in him what might not be excused in an ordinary person. A Washington lady is very fond of telling this incident: She was at a reception given at Prof. Newcomb's house. The occasion had been made delightful by the professor's wife and daughters, and every thing was very enjoyable. Toward the close of the evening, the lady, who had enjoyed the affair greatly, approached the host and asked him with much enthusiasm: "How often do you have these delightful reunions, professor?" "But once a year, madam—thank goodness!—but once a year." There was no polite prevarication in that reply.

Work and Long Life.

There has been so much justly said about the prejudicial effect of overwork, especially in using up the powers of man and cutting short his life, that it may be hastily assumed by some that work itself is opposed to length of days. This, however, is a very fatal mistake. Whatever may be proved concerning the comparative tendencies of different employments to shorten life, it will always be found that a life of idleness will surpass them all. The faculties of man used and not abused, serve not only to benefit the world, but even more to benefit himself. His health, happiness, and length of life depend largely upon the regular, and full—not excessive—employment of his mental and other powers. He who neglects this law and suffers them to waste, leading an aimless and vacant life, will reap the penalty quite as much in his own inferior condition, both physical and mental, as in any external loss he may sustain.

Those who believe that horses will presently disappear, not only from street-car lines but also from the street itself and from the country road, will be encouraged by the announcement that carriages to be run by gasoline are soon to appear in London, and that a French inventor has made a successful trip in a new steam carriage from Paris to Lyons.

Self admiration is lonesome exercise.

Wise men have always to be told how wise they are.

Appearances are not always the evidences of happiness.

Decay is but a process of reform.

Assumed virtue is false dignity.

FERTILIZERS

We appear again before the farming public in this our second year, greatly encouraged both in the amount of sales and from the flattering reports that we are receiving daily from all sections of the county as to the good results on last year's crops. We could produce hundreds of testimonials verifying this fact without going back over a series of years to get them; but as we have sold goods over nearly all this county, we prefer to refer you to your neighbors who have used them.

We challenge competition in analysis, drilling condition and bulkiness of our goods, as our sacks will show, and we also challenge competition in and we invite the farmer to go to the full extent of finding out the truth of this assertion. We believe that we are selling more goods than all of the factories of the county combined, and it is because of the large amount of our sales that we are able to do business on small profits.

Prices where Analysis is taken into consideration,

We Make Our Own Goods

from material with a guaranteed analysis, and

We know what we Sell, and do not have them manufactured by the cheapest BIDDER IN SOME OBSCURE PLACE, but do it right under the eyes of our customers. We will give a large reward if any such insoluble matter as hoofs, horns, leather or marl, or such cheap materials as plaster, ashes or dirt of any kind can be found in them. We invite the farmer to our factory and ask that you encourage home manufacture by buying from
