THE RANGE of industries patronized by the distilling industry is naturally wide yet out of 57 industrial concerns, public utilities and transportation companies patronized last year by a single distillery located near Baltimore, all but four have their principal or a branch office in Maryland cities. Purchased outside the state by Distillery X was bottling machinery, oakite products and malt. Purchased exclusively in Maryland were the following: chemicals, filters, corks and bottle closures, welding materials, pump supplies, bottles, lumber, stone, glass and other building materials, copper fittings, labels, sprinklers, grain, fuel, ice, barrels, hose and other rubber products, trucks and hardware. Regular services engaged included the telephone and telegraph, gas and electric light, plumbing, printing, lithography, storage, transportation and shipping. Distillery X is only one of 12 distilleries in Maryland all of which purchase a wide diversity of goods and services within the state. Such is the vital relationship between the distilling industry and other Maryland industries.
