Meeting Tomorrow's Troubles

By Rev. C. M. Griffeth

Pastor Ridgely M. E. Church

Ridgely, Md.

Every one of the troubles which you anticipate may happen tomorrow are, in reality, non-existent.

Tomorrow does not as yet exist and neither do these anticipated troubles exist.

There are two elements of tomorrow's troubles which to exist in today's life. One of these elements is the set-up of certain conditions and circumstances which may bring about that particular trouble which you anticipate.

The other element of tomorrow's troubles which exists in today's life is the fear, the worry, the anxiety which arise out of anticipation of what may happen.

Yo uare wise to think about what may happen tomorrow so that you may be the better prepared to meet it when it does come. But are you wise to permit yourself to be tortured by any anxiety arising out of what you may be dreading?

It is possible that the present set-up of conditions and of unfavorable circumstances may change overnight. Before you permit yourself t obe unduly agitated over what may happen, why not wait until tomorrow o tsee if they are going to happen.

These worries, anxieties, and fears about what may take place tomorrow which you are entertaining in your mind today are in themselves causing something to happen within you today.

They are undermining your physical strength. They are eating away your reserve of nerve force. They are destroying your poise. They are so weakening you as to prevent you from adequately meeting that trouble when it does happen,

The best way to meet tomorrow's trouble is to defeat the fear of it today.

Perfect Public Library

Tourists seeking the perfect public library are advised to go to Leipzig in Germany, where readers sit out on a pleasant terrace in the sunshine, read their books, and enjoy a quiet smoke.

ON THE SCREEN AT THE NEW LYCEUM

Nan Grey as Phoebe; George Sanders as Jaffrey; Margaret Lindsay as Hepzibah; Vincent Price as Clifford and Dick Foran as Matthew Maule in Universal's screen version of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "The House of the Seven Gables."

Depression's dark cloud had a silver lining for George Sanders. It made an actor out of him.

If the world-wide business slump hadn't come along, George would most probable be following a humdrum career in the business end of some British textile mill. Instead, he is gathering honors and a goodly supply of shekels by playing such screen roles as that of Jaffrey Pyncheon in Universal's "The House of the Seven Gables," coming to the New Lyceum Theatre on Monday and Tuesday, June 17 and 18.

Flees Revolution

Sanders was born in what was St. Petersburg, Russia, where his father was in business, in the days before Lenin. The revolution made refugees of them, and the family fled home to England.

Always interested in science, Sanders prepared at the Dunhurst and Bradles schools, and at college at Brighton for a technical career. He found a job in South Africa—and along came the depression and George went home to England.

Compelled to Act

Wtih business and manufacturing in a comatose state, George couldn't find another job. An uncle suggested that he try to become a singer. George took the advice, and landed a place in the revue, "Ballyhoo." And in rapid succession he obtained engagements in other English stage productions.

His first picture was "Strange Cargo." After he had appeared in a number of British-made productions, he went to Hollywood and found an important role in "Lloyds of London," which brought him a term contract at one of the major studios.

Notable Pictures

Sanders is best known for his screen characterizations of "the Saint" in such pictures as "The Saint Strikes Back" and "The Saint's Double Trouble."

George doesn't want to be a romantic leading man. He prefers such characterizations as that of Jaffrey Pyncheon in "The House of the Seven Gables," Universal's screen dramatization of Nathaniel Hawthorne's famous novel.

In the cast with Sanders are seen Margaret Lindsay, Vincent Price, Nan Grey and Dick Foran in the leading roles. The picture was directed by Joe May.

Torrential rains and the awe-inspiring terror of a tropical hurricane save Dorothy Lamour, Robert Preston and Lynne Overman from cremation on a burning island, and provide the thrilling climax to Paramount's ne wTechnicolor South Sea romance "Typhon" which comes on Wednesday and Thursday, June 19 and 20 to the New Lyceum Theatre.

Dorothy Lamour, most popular "naitve" girl in the world, doesn't appear in her much-sung sarong. This time it's a lava-lava, which must be Polynesian for "retrenchment," because this bright cloth is scantier than ever! In fact, Technicolor and Dorothy have produced a ne wcombination, which we're calling "Techniclure."

The huricane sequence provides the most thrilling nature spectacle ever to be filmed. Rain lashes down like blasted mercury; whole palm trees are uprooted by the maddened wind,and the tidal waves top crests of fifty feet! Only those who have lived through tropical hurricanes will be abel to make comparisons.

Hand in hand with the technical perfection of the storm, and of the surging Technicolor is the romance-filled plot. Dorothy, bronzed and alluring, lives with Koko, her trained chimpanzee-companion on an uninhabited South Sea island, far from normal sea lanes. She was the only survivor of a sailing ship, wrecked there ten years before Robert Preston and Lynne Overman arrive with their pearl-divnig submarine. They are being pursued by a vengeful Polynesian chief, whom they have inadvertently insulted, and who believes they have stolen his pearls.

Forced to abandon their ship for lack of oil, Robert Preston gets lost, and—lucky dog—found by Dorothy Lamour and Koko. A mutiny against Lynne Overman by J. Carroll Naish and his Kanaka crew, and the arrival of the Chief with his gang of cutthroats, follow in rapid succession.

There's plenty of comic relief supplied by Ko-Ko and Lynne Overman, and there's a constant panorama of South Se acolor that will leave you dazzled. This Technicolor romance was directed by Louis King, who previously directed the smash hit, "Bengal Tiger."
