Not a Monarchy?

There seems to be a monarchial tendency about the administration of President Cleveland and he is hedging himself about with the "divinity of a king." This tendency was exhibited in the first place by the rigid order forbidding access to heads of Departments except at stated periods. This was done to relieve the Cabinet officers from the presure brought upon them by a horde of hungry office-seekers. It seemed to be an anti-republican proceeding, but then it was done in the interests of the public business, and everybody was disposed to acquiesce except the people who were immediately affected by it. Still, it was not in harmony with the theory of American sovereignty, which holds every man to be as good as every other man before the law, and it was generally supposed the line of restriction would not be drawn tighter in any other direction. But now the President has closed his own door to the presence and appeals of the faithful who may desire to show him how fully they are entitled to official recognition and to the offices, certain conditions prompting him to announce that hereafter he will decline "all personal interviews with those seeking appointments to office," except as he, on his "own motion, may specially invite them." He even declines to see persons who only wish to pay their respects and requests Senators and Representatives to aid him "by declining to introduce their constituents."

Now, it is probably true that notwithstanding the President's well known devotion to civil service reform and his high appreciation of the fact that "public office is a public trust," the rush for place since his inauguration has been unprecedented; but the course of the administration has fairly justified the anticipation that the claims of faithful party workers would not be ignored and has stimulated the office-seeking element to unusual activity. And why should not every Democrat who aspires to a presidential appointment be privileged to plead his own cause with the appointing power? It probably wouldn't have done him any good at any rate, but now he is flatly told that it will be prejudicial to his prospects even to remain in Washington "to await results."

We are sadly constrained to conclude that Mr. Cleveland is apostate to the ideas of "Jeffersonian Simplicity" in the administration of the affairs of the government. The poor, anxious office-seeker is not to be permitted to enter the presence of the great man—and greater office-seeker also—even hat in hand, to humbly sue for the place he has earned by party services. "No, sir," says this President, who appoints personal commissioners, and invests them with unconstitutional authority, "no, sir, you cannot enter the doors of the executive office, except as I specially invite you, and if you stay at Washington, waiting results, you will only prejudice your own prospects." Does Mr. Cleveland imagine that this country belongs to him, even as he conceived the right, in defiance of the constitution, to appoint Mr. Blount as his personal commissioner with power to nullify the official acts of a United States minister? He needs to learn that the people are the sovereigns and masters in this country, not the servants of the man whom they have chosen to execute the laws. This is not a monarchy.

Senator Gibson, of Maryland, procured the appointment of his wife's brother, Mr. Powell Hollyday, as superintendent of construction of public buildings, under the present administration, but it has been ascertained that the incumbent of the position should be an experienced practical constructor and builder, qualifications in which Mr. Hollyday, though an educated gentleman, is entirely deficient. Now he has resigned, without ever having entered upon the duties of the office, and Senator Gibson is asking that he be given as good a position in some other department. Considering the precedent in the Eckells case there does not seem to have been a just reason for Mr. Hollyday "stepping down and out." Eckells was appointed Comptroller of the Currency by President Cleveland, one of the most important fiduciary positions connected with the government. His lack of knowledge of financial questions was notorious, and he acknowledged his entire ignorance of the duties pertaining to the position. In spite of this the President persisted in his appointment and insisted upon his confirmation, which was accomplished by the votes of obedient Democratic Senators. And there he is in an office which is probably being administered by proxy, as a knowledge of finance is not acquired in a week or a month. Why should there be one rule for Mr. Eckells and another for Mr. Hollyday? But then the peculiarities of this administration are beyond estimate.

It is said that the apprehension of Marylanders that the old commonwealth would not make a creditable showing at the Columbian Exposition, in contrast with the exhibits of her sister States, has not been realized. The commissioners for the State have made the best possible use of the small appropriation granted, apparently with reluctance, by the Legislature, and the Maryland building, though plain, is a substantial structure. The State shows best, however, in the exhibit of her varied resources, which are said to equal the best and to be superior to many. The oyster and canned goods exhibits are particularly noticeable and attract much attention. Maryland is probably not behind any of her sisters in the canning industry, and it is gratifying that her citizens have used this excellent opportunity of making it known.

Mr. William T. Brantly, a professor in the Maryland University, School of Law, Baltimore, was appointed Secretary of State by Gov. Brown, on Monday, vice Edward W. LeCompte, deceased. Mr. Brantly took the oath of office and entered immediately upon his duties.

It Loves the Soldier.

The peculiar affection of the present administration for the old soldier is illustrated by its prompt removal of four out of the five postmasters in this county who served in the Union army. Here is the list:

Rev. Jno. B. Hall, Hampstead.
Levi Myers, Pleasant Valley.
H. H. Brough, Uniontown.
Wm. H. H. Grove, Woodbine.

Mr. Hall's health was ruined in the service and Mr. Myers carries three gunshot wounds on his person and suffers intensely as the result of his devotion to his country. They were all gallant soldiers, but are among the first in this county to fall under the axe of Headsman Maxwell for their political opinions sake. Their prompt removal indicates that their army service rather made them a target for the administration than afforded a shield of protection. One soldier postmaster yet remains in the county, namely, W. S. Drach, of New Windsor. His measure of patriotic devotion is shown in his maimed body, but he will probably be the next to "walk the plank." The love of this administration for the old soldier is peculiar.

Mr. Edward W. LeCompte, Governor Brown's Secretary of State, died at his home in Cambridge, Dorchester county, on Friday morning of last week. Mr Lecompte spent most of the years of his manhood in public life. He was for a number of years a clerk in the office of the Register of Wills under the late Governor Hicks, and afterwards succeeded to the office and was several times re-elected. He was a great favorite in Dorchester county and his death is much regretted.

United Brethren General Conference.

The General Conference of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ met in its twenty-first quadrennial session on Thursday in Dayton, O., and will continue for about fourteen days. The body is composed of 187 delegates; 131 are ministerial and 56 lay delegates—two of the latter women.

This being the first United Brethren General Conference to admit lay delegates, and of both sexes, the body is naturally invested with new interest and importance to the denomination, and to the Christian public generally. The delegates represent the following callings: Sixty-five presiding elders, forty-four pastors, eight college secretaries, four college presidents, two college professors, four local preachers, two lawyers, one editor, seventeen merchants, seventeen farmers, two carpenters, one railroad conductor, one insurance company treasurer, one manufacturer, one bank clerk, one hotel keeper, one blacksmith, one stock dealer, one notary public, one traveling salesman, one clerk of court and one retired business man.

Besides these are the five bishops of the church, who are members ex-officio of the General Conference, and act in the capacity of presiding officers alternately by turns throughout the session. One hundred and nineteen of the delegates sit in the General Conference for the first time.

Crop Reports.

Following is a summary of Weather Crop Bulletin No. 5, for the week ended Monday, May 8, issued by the Maryland State Weather Bureau, C. P. Cronk, meteorologist in charge:

The weather conditions which prevailed during the past seven days differed but little from those of the preceding week, the temperature still remaining considerably below the average for the period, and the rainfall being greatly in excess of the normal, and badly distributed. Frosts occurred in many localities on the last two or three mornings of the week. Warmer weather, with more sunshine, is generally needed.

In Western Maryland, wheat, oats and grass are growing well; rye is not in bloom; no corn planted; prospects for fruit are good, though it is reported that there has been some damage from frost.

In Northern-Central Maryland planting of spring crops has been delayed by the cold, wet weather; wheat looks better than it did, with oats and grass improved; potatoes are coming up.

In Southern Maryland the hillside fields were washed by rains, and corn-planting was delayed. Potato and tobacco plants are thriving; and grass, wheat and rye are growing well.

In Eastern Maryland fruit was injured to some extent by heavy rains, high winds and cold weather. Corn-planting was delayed; grass is backward, but wheat is getting a good growth.

Carlyle W. Harris, who was convicted of causing the death of his young wife, a school girl named Helen Potts, whom he had married secretly, by the administration of morphine, was put to death in Sing Sing prison, New York, by electricity, on Monday last. He died protesting his innocence and left a written statement to the same purport, in which he pointed out some of the inconsistencies of the evidence for the prosecution. Harris was a young man of talent and belonged to a prominent New York family. His mother left no effort untried to deliver him from the consequences of the crime of which he was convicted. She believed in his innocence and declares that he was murdered. The probability is that he was guilty, but just enough uncertainty clouds the case to lead to the opinion in the minds of many that he was possibly innocent. His conviction was brought about by the determined efforts of his wife's mother. He met death with the calmness of a martyr.

The boiler of the Cincinnati and Memphis steamer, Ohio, exploded on Sunday morning, 24 miles below Cairo, and half a dozen people were killed and many injured. Some of the dead were literally cooked by the escaping steam. Forty years ago accidents of this character were quite common on the Mississippi, but recently have been of rare occurrence.

The body of Frank W. Rohl, who escaped from Sing Sing prison April 20, 1893, with Thomas Pallister, was found in Hudson river, opposite Sing Sing, Wednesday morning. There was a bullet wound in the right side of the head. The two prisoners were under sentence of death for murder. Rohl, it is supposed, had $15,000, sent him by his brother, and his companion probably murdered him for the money.

Some enterprising, but rascally genius, has found a method of making money out of the one cent Columbian postage stamp. He is sending out circulars all over the country offering to sell a fine steel engraving of the "Landing of Columbut," for $1.00. The picture is described as a specimen of the finest art of the engraver. Whoever sends a dollar for this wonderful picture receives for it a one cent postage stamp upon which the event referred to is delineated in very handsome style, to be sure, but possessing only the value of the hundredth part of its cost to the credulous purchaser.

Gainesville, Texas, was visited by a cyclone on Saturday last, which did considerable damage. Some dwellings were demolished in the country and fatal injuries inflicted. A railroad train was blown thirty feet from the track into a ravine. The brakeman was killed and several others injured, the conductor probably fatally.

J. J. Jackson and his wife and two sons and a daughter perished in a fire which burned their house and nearly all other buildings in the village of North Galveston, Ind., on Tuesday. The total property loss is $75,000.

OUR SURE Growth Fertilizer!

Is a special and complete Manure for Potatoes. Sweet Corn and all Trucking.

Our Potato and Trucking Fertilizer furnishes all the elements of plant food found in either natural or artificial manure. It is richer in these ingredients than many of the high Price Fertilizers now in use. The most successful Potato Growers testify that the best results are obtained from the use of such goods, the potatoes being large, smooth and free from scab. In prize contests where 700 and 1000 bushels are raised, goods with such ingredients are used. Therefore we strongly recommend

Our Fertilizer for Potatoes.

With a favorable season the following are essentials of success in growing potatoes:

1. Depth of Planting.
2. A Mellow Soil.
3. Good Cultivation.
4. Ample supply of the proper Plant Food in soluble forms.

Mr. Alfred Rose, who grew 1031 bushels of potatoes on one acre and won the prize of the American Agriculturist, used exclusively 1600 lbs. of a high grade potato fertilizer and no other manure.

Our $22 Dissolved Champion Bone is the Fertilizer to use for Potatoes, Sweet Corn, Peas and all Trucking. We have much cheaper Fertilizer where it is wanted. Give us a call and be convinced. Our goods are No. 1. We can refer to the best Farmers all over the county.

Very Respectfully,
