The proposed emergency compulsary military training will likely be enacted by Congress into law within the next few weeks. This means that large numbers of able-bodied young men will be trained in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps for military duty. It does not mean, however, that when these men leave their homes they are going to war and cannot be compared to the draft of 1917 and 1918 when the men left for they knew not what. A few years ago the thought of compulsary military training in the United States would have been absurd, so also would have been the thought that Germany would be romping over Europe, crushing both defenseless as well as defended countries and inducting those who are not in concentration camps to virtual slavery. The smaller and the more peaceful a European country is the sooner it became victims in the wild desire of two or three dictators to rule the world regardless of the suffering caused both ot their own nationals and to the helpless vcitims. With the Western Hemisphere drawn closer to Europe and asia by modern scientific developments of transportation, the United States is not beyond the ambitions of these dictators and apparently the assurance that this hemisphere continue the form of government which the people desire is directly in proportion to our ability. The Europeon War has shown that the waring dictators do not like a good fight; that every conceivable method such as lies, traitorship and deceipt is used to break down resisttance. The stronger we are in our ability to resist, the greater are our chances to maintain our Democratic form of government. A well trained population in the art of war, together with our present great industrial and financial assets, will make the United States secure both from inside and outside interference. If properly handled, the first call for military training should not be a great hardship. It will materially aid the present efforts to find employment for the youth of our country. Thousands of these young men who are in C. C. C. Camps can be trained in the camps in which they are. It will make practically no difference in their present financial affairs as these camps are now run on the basis of our army setup. They will merely change the routine from labor batallions to military units.

The Chestertown Business Men's Association is interesting itself in the Chestertown Hosiery Mill and will endeavor to assist the present owners to work out some of their problems. This is Chestertown's largest industry and has a weekly pay-roll of approximately $600. The hosiery industry has always been operated on a piece work basis and the new wage hour law has created complications in wage adjustment. It is hoped that the interest of the business group will materially aid in increasing this industry into an even greater community asset. The factory building is owned by the business men of the town.

When the voters of Maryland go to the polls in November they will vote not only for a Senator, Congressman and President but will also decide on eight referendums and amendments. While many of these referendums are not of a great deal importance to the average voter, there are however included decisions on the establishment of People's Courts, whether or not the Governor of Maryland can succeed himself and a change in the conservation set-up so as to separate that department into a bay fisheries division and an upland game and fish division. These referendums will be given wide publicity and should be carefully studied by the voters.

Lightweight Shovel Champ

A new garden shovel has been called by its manufacturers "the strongest lightweight shovel ever made." Its central reinforcement is 60 per cent thicker than is usual in shovels, and it runs clear from the top of the socket to the cutting edge. This added strength through the center makes possible a tapering thinness toward the outer sides.
