In the Circuit Court for Carroll County, Sitting as a Court of Equity.

Franklin G. Richards, Belle Upperco. and Jesse Upperco, her husband, Plaintiffs, vs Peter Buchman, Francis Buchman, Abraham Buchman, Margaret Zepp, and George Zepp, her husband, Rebecca Feig, and Joseph Feig, her husband, Agnes C. Brummell, and Frank Brummell, her husband, Ida H. Buchman, Amanda Buchman, widow of Michael Buchman, Junior, late of Carroll county, Maryland, deceased, Henry Buchman, Albert Buchman, Roscoe Buchman, George Buchman, Parke Buchman, Charles Buchman, Dora Buchman, Ada Buchman, Harriett Buchman, Jacob Richards, John C. Richards, Rosa Richards, and Junie G. Richards, Defendants.

THE object of this Bill is to obtain a decree for the sale of certain Real Estate, situate in Carroll county, Maryland, of which a certain Michael Buchman, late of said county and State died seized and possessed, and for an accounting by Margaret Zepp, and George Zepp, her husband, and Ida H. Buchman of the rents and profits thereof.

That a certain Michael Buchman departed this life, in or about the year eighteen hundred and seventy-five, in Carroll county, Maryland, intestate, seized and possessed of a parcel of land, situate in said county, containing about sixty-four acres, which is correctly described in Exhibit "A," filed with the Bill, less about ten acres sold off and conveyed by said intestate in his lifetime.

That said intestate at the time of his death left Phœbe Buchman, his widow, and the following children, his only heirs at law, to-wit: Elizabeth Richards, wife of Jacob Richards, Peter Buchman, Michael Buchman, Junior, Francis Buchman, Abraham Buchman, Rebecca Feig, wife of Joseph Feig, Margaret, now the wife of George Zepp, Agnes C., now the wife of Frank Brummell, and Ida H. Buchman.

Richards, all of whom are infants under the age of twenty-one years, except the said Jacob Richards, Franklin G. Richards, and Belle and Jesse Upperco, who are adults above the age of twenty-one years, and all reside in Carroll county aforesaid, except the said Franklin G. Richards, who resides in Baltimore city, and the said Belle and Jesse Upperco, her husband, who reside in Baltimore county, in the State of Maryland.

That since the death of said intestate, Michael Buchman, Sr., the heirs at law have sold off and conveyed a portion of said Real Estate in said Exhibit "A" described, leaving about the quantity of forty acres remaining of which the said intestate was seized at the time of his death, which is of the value of about $1200 00, and which said Real Estate has descended to and vested in the said Franklin G. Richards and Belle Upperco, wife of Jesse Upperco, the plaintiffs, as tenants in common with the aforesaid heirs at law of said intestate.

That since the death of said intestate the said Margaret Zepp, wife of George Zepp, and the said Ida H. The Bill then prays that the defendants may be required to answer. That said Margaret Zepp and George Zepp, her husband, and Ida H. That a decree may be passed for the sale of said Real Estate and distribution of the proceeds of the sale thereof made among the parties entitled thereto. For further relief and also an order of publication against the said Francis Buchman who is a non-resident of this State.

HOME AND FRIENDS.

O there's a power to make each hour
As sweet as Heaven designed it;
Nor need we roam to bring it home,
Though few there be who find it.
We seek too high for things close by,
And lose what nature found us;
For life hath here no charms so dear,
As home and friends around us.

We oft destroy the present joy
For future hopes, and praise them,
Whilst flowers as sweet bloom at our feet
If we but stoop to raise them.
For things afar still sweetest are,
When youth's bright spell hath bound us;
But soon we're taught the earth hath naught
Like home and friends around us.

The friends that speed in time of need
When hope's last reed is shaken,
Do show us still that, come what will,
We are not quite forsaken.
Though all were night, if but the light
From friendship's altar crowned us,
'Twould prove the bliss of earth was this—
Our home and friends around us.

Select Story.

REVENGED.

It was about half an hour after sunset, but an orange light still burned above the lonely Southern valley. The trembling evening star was hanging over the green silence of the fragrant Tennessee woods. Vapor wreathed phantoms from the river course, and from the dense thickets that skirted the camp ground cume ever anon the mournful sound of whipporwills, sounding faint, and low, like the remembered echoes of a dream.

Yet Wallace Keene would have given well nigh all he was worth to exchange its luxuriant verdure one moment only for the pine clad heights and salt winds of Maine, with russet winged robbins chirping their familiar madrigals in the apple orchards below.

"Two years ago I left home," murmured Wallace Keene as he gazed thoughtfully out where the purple sky seemed to touch the waving woods. "Two years since young Harney told me he never would give Marion to a 'common mechanic,' yet the wound rankles sharply still."

"Captain—"

"Is that you Spicer? What now?"

Captain Keene turned his face toward the opening of the tent, where Private Spicer's head was just visible.

"Why, sir, our fellows have just brought in that lot o' men that was put in that scrimmage across the river this morning, and some on 'em is wounded bad."

"I will be there directly, Spicer."

There was a little crowd of men gathered on the river shore in the warm glow of the spring, but they silently parted right and left for Captain Keene's tall figure to pass through their midst. Six or seven dusty, bleeding men were sitting and lying around in various postures, their ghastly brows made still paler by the faint, uncertain light of the young moon. Keene glanced quickly around, taking in the whole scene in that one brief survey.

He stopped short as his eye fell on a new face, half shadowed by a green sweep of drooping alders—a pale, blood-streaked face with a gaping cut on the forehead.

"This is not one of our men!" he exclaimed sharply. "How came he here?"

"No, sir," explained Spicer, stepping forward. "I think he belonged to the Eighth. I'm sure I don't know how he ever got mixed up with our fellows, but there he was, and I thought we'd better not wait for their ambulance, but bring him straight here."

"Right," briefly pronounced Keene stooping over the insensible figure. "Let them carry him to my tent, Spicer."

"I beg your pardon, captain—to your tent?"

"Didn't you hear what I said?" sharply interrogated the superior officer. "Bruce, make the others comfortable in Lieutenant Ordway's quarters. There will be plenty of room for them there."

"Well, I'm beat!" ejaculated Spicer five or ten minutes, afterward as he came out of the captain's tent scratching his head of coarse red curls.

Meanwhile the dim light of a lamp swinging from the center of the little tent shone full on the singular group within its circling folds—the wounded private lying like a corpse, still and pale, on the narrow iron-bedstead, the young officer leaning over him and supporting his head—and the brisk, gray-eyed little surgeon keenly surveying both as he unfolded his case of phials and powders.

"He is not dead, doctor?"

"No; but he would have been in another half hour. Your prompt remedies have saved his life, Captain Keene."

"Thank God! oh, thank God!"

The surgeon looked at Keene in amazement.

"He doesn't belong to your regiment. Why are you so interested in the case?"

"Because, doctor," said Keene, with a strange, bright smile, "when I saw him lying under the elders, dead as I thought, I rejoiced in my heart. At first—only at first. The next moment I remembered that I was a man and a Christian. For years I have carried the spirit of Cain in my breast toward that man, now it is washed out in his blood."

It was high noon of the next day before the wounded man started from a fevered doze into the faint dawn of consciousness.

"Where I am?" he faltered, looking wildly around him, with an ineffectual effort to raise his dizzy head from the pillow.

"Now, be easy," said Private Spicer, who was cleaning his gun by the bedside. "You're all right, my boy. Where are you? Why in the Captain's tent, to be sure, and that's pretty good quarters for the rank and file,—I should think."

"The Captain's tent? How came I here?"

"That's just what I can't tell you, you'll have to ask himself, I guess. You ain't any relation to Captain Keene, be you?"

"Keene—Keene!" repeated the man.

"Because," pursued Spicer, "if you'd been his own brother born, he couldn't have taken better care of you. His cousin, maybe?"

"No! God forgive me, no!" faltered the wounded man with a low, bitter moan.

"Here he is now," said Spicer, the familiar accents of his voice falling to a more respectfully modulated tone as he rose and saluted his officer.

"He's all right, Captain—as clear-headed as a bell."

"Very well, Spicer, you may go."

The private obeyed with alacrity. When they were alone together in the tent, Wallace Keene came to the low bedside.

"So you're all right, Mr. Harney?" he asked kindly.

"Captain Keene," murmured Harney, shrinking from the soothing tone as if it had been a dagger's point, "I have no right to expect this treatment at your hands."

"Oh, never mind," said the young man lightly. "What can I do to make you more comfortable?"

Harney was silent, but his eyes were full of the tears he fain would drive back—tears of remorseful shame—and he turned his flushed face lest the man he had once so grossly insulted should see them fall.

The next day he again alluded to the same subject.

"Captain Keene, you asked me yesterday what you could do for me?"

"Yes."

"I want you to ask leave for May to come and nurse me, when I'm transferred to the hospital."

Captain Keene turned toward the sick man a face white and hard as marble and said in a strangely altered voice:

"Do you mean your sister?"

"My sister—yes."

"Of course, if you wish it I can obtain permission, Harney. But—"

"Well?"

Keene's cheek colored, and he bit his lip.

"I should not suppose she would be willing to leave her husband for the very uncertain comforts of hospital life."

Harney smiled, looking into his companion's face with keen, searching eyes.

"May is not married, Captain Keene. She has no such appendage as a husband!"

"Not married!"

"I know what you thought. She was engaged and almost married. We had nearly induced her to become Lisle Spencer's wife, but she refused on the very eve of her wedding day."

Keene had risen, and was pacing up and down the narrow limits of the tent with feverish haste.

"Because," went on Harney, "she loved a certain young volunteer who left S——— about two years ago, too well to become any other man's wife."

"Harney—you do not mean to say—"

"I do, though, old fellow, and what's more, I mean te say thet since I've been lying in this tent my eyes have been pretty thoroughly opened to my own absurd folly and impertinence."

Captain Keene wrung his companion's hand and hurried away to mistake the bootjack for the inkstand and to commit several other no less inexcusable absurdities.

"I see you'll get nothing written to-day," sighed Harney, as he lay watching Wallace Keene tear up sheet after sheet of note paper.

"I shall though," smiled Wallace, "only I can't tell exactly which end of my letter to begin at."

Captain Keene did write—and if he inserted a little foreign matter into the epistle it didn't matter, for Harney, considerate fellow, never asked to see it.

Marion came and when her brother was promoted into the convalescent ward, she went home again only to lose herself in showers of orange blossoms, forests of white satin ribbon and acres of pearly shimmering silk, shot with frosty gleams of silvery brocade, for the course of true love, after all its turns and intricacies, had at length found its way into sunshine and was running smoothly over sands of gold.

Spiders Eat Their Mothers.

One of the most unnatural things in nature, if the expression is allowable, is the manner in which the young of the common wolf spider, found everywhere in this country, treat their mother. After the little creature has laid her eggs she envelopes them in a silken covering, so as to make a ball about the size of a pea, and this she carries about with her wherever she goes, and will defend it with her life. When the young are hatched, they climb on her back, giving her a monstrous appearance, and ride about untill nearly half grown, and as soon as they discover their strength they fall to and devour their mother. As a rule the maternal relation is recognized in the animal and insect world only as the necessity for protection exists, but instances of the young actually devouring a parent by main force and common consent are extremely rare.

Killing the Canada Thistle.

The Canada thistle, although a rather pretty blue flower, is as great a pest as the white rudbeckia, misnamed daisy. The thistle when cut off in fair weather will soon cap over and start at once from the stub, and some of the roots will start independently for the surface. The surest method of destroying this pest is to cut them near the surface while raining, at any time from formation of bloom to maturing of plant. The rain should be of some duration. The plant will excrete the juice and absorb the water, which is certain death. Showery weather is rather preferable, as all vegetation is more active during the sudden change of the elements. Small areas can be cut on the approach of a heavy shower, but it must be immediately preceding, and you have the Canada thistle scientifically and almost automatically conquered at merely the trifling cost of cutting.

A strange thing happened at a dance given by a member of the Russian nobility long ago. The night was bitter cold, but the cold bleak winds did not reach the interior of the ballroom. Here there were warmth and comfort, and the gay dancers became overheated and they perspired freely—the air of the room, having been dry and like a sponge, quickly absorbed the moisture from their persons. A Russian count, being uncomfortably warm, opened a window, which admitted a current of cold air, and the effect was novel and instantaneous. Immediately a part of the moisture was turned into little crystals, shining silver white, that floated in the air, and, to the astonishment of all, there was a miniature snowstorm in the midst of the gay throng.
