One reads a lot these days about the Legislative Council at Annapolis but few realize fully just what its purpose is and how it will effect the coming session of the Maryland Legislature. In the first place the members of the Council include some of the outstanding members of both houses of the Legislature and is headed by Senator Arthur Brice, president of the Senate. For several months the Council has been working on major legislation which will come before the Legislature and by the time the session starts in January will be in shape to present in a more intelligent way than has been the custom in the past. It promises two major accomplishments, both of which should be welcomed by all citizens of this State. First it should eliminate much of the confusion at the opening of the session and permit an earlier functioning toward the accomplishing the work of the Legislature and assurance of shorter sessions. Secondly, by eliminating the last minute rush which has necessitated the cramming through of legislation, it promises more intelligent action on the part of representatives. In past sessions covering a long period of years, many bills have been passed without a thorough knowledge by Legislators of what they embodied. Too often this last minute rush has enabled the passage of laws that probably would not have had a chance if more time and thought could have been given to them. The work of the Council is in no sense a method of forcing legislation. It has accomplished already much of the committee work by interviewing groups and individuals most directly interested and affected by proposed legislation. It appears to be a legislative reform and should it accomplish what it promises there is little doubt but that it may become permanent.

NEWS GATHERED ON PENINSULA

Five Wenona oystermen narrowly escaped serious injury on Monday, when their dredge boat, "The Myrtle", was destroyed by explosion, throwing them all into the waters of Tangier Sound.

The men were pulled out of the water off Wenona by Captain Julius Webster who was operating his boat, "Rue Brothers" nearby. He said he was the closest boat when he noticed the other craft leaning on its side.

He remarked to his crew that it must have capsized and started in the direction of the Myrtle. As he neared it, the explosion roared out from the cabin and "blew it into a thousand pieces."

When they reached the spot of the accident the men of the stricken craft were clinging to the wreckage.

The explosion occurred in the cabin where Zeck Taylor, Jr., 17 was preparing the noon meal. He was blown through the roof of the cabin and the rest of the men tossed into the water when the boat fell to pieces.
