CASTORIA

For Infants and Children.

Castoria promotes Digestion, and overcomes Flatulency, Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhœa, and Feverishness. Thus the child is rendered healthy and its sleep natural. Castoria contains no Morphine or other narcotic property.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me." H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 South Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"I use Castoria in my practice, and find it specially adapted to affections of children." ALEX. ROBERTSON, M. D., 1057 2d Ave., New York.

"From personal knowledge and observation I can say that Castoria is an excellent medicine for children, acting as a laxative and relieving the pent up bowels and general system very much. Many mothers have told me of its excellent effect upon their children." DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR.

STATE OF MARYLAND,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

WHEREAS, Section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of Maryland makes it the duty of the Governor to order the publication in certain newspapers to be designated by him, of any bill, or bills, passed proposing any amendments to the said Constitution, and;

WHEREAS, at the January Session, 1892, of the General Assembly of Maryland, a bill pas passed proposing an amendment to the Constitution, which amendment is Chapter 313 of the Acts of 1892, and is as follows, to wit:

CHAPTER 313.

AN ACT to add an additional section to Article four of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, Three-fifths of all the members of the two houses concurring, that the following section be, and the same is hereby proposed, as an amendment to the Constitution of this State; and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, the same shall supercede and stand in the place of Section thirty-nine of Article four of said Constitution.

SEC. 39. The General Assembly shall, as often as it may think the same proper and expedient, provide by law for the election of an additional Judge of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore city, and whenever provision is so made by the General Assembly, there shall be elected by the voters of said city another Judge of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore city, who shall be subject to the same constitutional provisions, hold his office for the same term of years, receive the same compensation, and have the same powers as are, or shall be provided by the Constitution, or laws of this State, for the Judges of said Supreme Bench of Baltimore city and the General Assembly may provide bylaws, or the Supreme Bench by its rules, for requiring causes in any of the courts of Baltimore city to be tried before the Court without a jury, unless the litigants or some one of them shall within such reasonable time or times, as may be prescribed, elect to have their causes tried before a jury. And the General Assembly may reapportion, change or enlarge the jurisdiction of the several courts in said city.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall be, at the next general election to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection in pursuance of the direction contained in Article fourteen of the Constitution of this State; and at the said general election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter may elect, and immediately after said election due return shall be made to the Governor of the votes for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by said fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 4th, 1892.

We hereby certify that the aforegoing is a correct coy of an act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed January Session, 1892.

W. G. PURNELL,
Secretary of the Senate.
CARLTON SHAFER,
Chief Clerk of the House of Delegates.

Now, therefore, I, Frank Brown, Governor of Maryland, do hereby order and direct that the said hereinbefore described bill, or Act of the General Assembly, proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of Maryland, be published once a week for at least three months in two newspapers published in each county in this State, if so many are therein published, and in three newspapers in the city of Baltimore, before the next ensuing general election, which will be held on Tuesday, the seventh day of November, 1893; at which said election the proposed amendment aforesaid will be submitted to the legal and qualified voters of Maryland for adoption or rejection.

THE GREAT SEAL OF MARYLAND.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland, at the city of Annapolis, on 19th day of July, in the year of our Lord, eighteen hundred and ninety-three, and of the Independence of the United States, the one hundred and seventeenth.

FRANK BROWN.

By the Governor,
WM. T. BRANTLEY,
Secretary of State. 7-29-te.

DON'T GROWL.

Don't growl about the weather
When the storm clouds stud the sky;
Be cheerful, calm and patient
Till the storm shall pass you by.
The skies are all the fairer
When the tempest wild is done,
And without the clouds you'd never
Quite appreciate the sun.

Don't growl about expenses
When the cash is running low;
Don't wish you had the money
Of rich Mr. So and So.
Wishes seldom are indulged in
By a man with any pride;
They are naught but hobby-horses
Made for timid fools to ride.

Then buckle on your armor,
Look your fate square in the face;
If you stop to growl about it
You never win the race.
Tho' your troubles are as mountains
And as midnight black your sky,
If you're patient and will hustle
You will get there by and by.

MY BIRTHDAY.

AY C. L. W.
From the Saturday Evening Post.

When I was a boy, we lived at Wimbledon. Being the only child, I am afraid I was sadly spoilt, so by the time I was seven years old I used to rule everyone in the house but my father.

There was only one creature, I believe, who really enjoyed being with me, and that was my little fox-terrier Scamp. Two "scamps" together, we were, I can assure you.

My friend and playmate Harold St. John had a tricycle-horse, which I had ridden occasionally. So, on my seventh birthday, when I found a beautiful one, just like his, waiting for me in the dining-room, I was delighted. I passed "Billy," as I named it at once, talked to it and kissed it till Scamp jumped up whining, and licked my hand to let me know he was a wee bit jealous.

As father left the room to go to his office, he turned to pat my head kindly.

"You will try to be good little son now that you are seven years old, won't you, Charlie?" he said. "See if you can keep out of mischief today at all events. I shall be back to see you cut your cake, and, who knows, perhaps I might find some fireworks for a little birthday boy?"

"I'll be so good, father," I said; and I really meant it, but you cannot straighten a crooked stick all in a minute. I was a very crooked stick indeed, and it was not likely I could make myself straight in one day, even with the prospect of cake and fireworks, though, as it happened, I never had either.

My favorite playground was in the Wimbledon Woods. Of course I was not allowed to go wandering about them alone, but I very often did. I would dart down one of the little paths, stoop behind a bush until my nurse had passed, calling to me, and declaring I was just the tiresomest young gentleman she ever had charge of; then I would wander about hunting for bullets of flowers, with Scamp to help me. I knew very well where it was safe to go, even when the little flag at the top of the high staff warned people that the volunteers were practising at the targets; but I generally chose Wednesday for my disobedience, because on that day there was no shooting at all.

On all birthdays I was allowed to please myself about going out, so when nurse came to fetch me about ten o'clock I said I would rather stop at home and play with my new presents.

"Well, you can't have that great thing up in the nursery," said nurse, looking at Billy with no friendly eye, as only one more means of my getting into mischief. "It's a pity Master Harold ever let you ride his: you'll kill yourself, that's what you will do, and then what will become of you?"

If I was "masterful," so was nurse, and she took billy under her arm and marched off with it to the garden-room. As I was anxious to try a new box of paints, I did not mind just then, but by eleven o'clock I was tired of being indoors, and calling out, "I am going into the garden," I put on my cap and ran down.

Once out of doors, I made up my mind I must try Billy. Nothing was easier than to open the French windows of the room and pull it out. A turn or two around the garden only made me long to try it on the road, and in a few minutes, Scamp, Billy, and I were tearing along the road leading across the common to the woods. It was so much smoother and pleasanter than our garden paths that I gained courage as I went, if that can be called courage which leads us to do wrong, and soon reached one of the paths leading into the woods.

Pop, pop, went the bullets from time to time, but I was too much accustomed to them to think twice about them except when I was engaged hunting for them.

Now, although I had ridden Harold's tricycle occasionally, it had always gone up or down a hill. Coming to a little dip in one of the paths, I found it such a delightful sensation that nothing would satisfy me but a rush down a long hill. I knew of one straight steep path and made up my mind to try that. Having reached the top of the slope I moved my feet quickly, and Billy went rushing down. For a moment it was all delicious, especially as Scamp barked and enjoyed the fun, then I suddenly turned cold with fear, and my breath seemed to stop; Billy was running away with me. I shrieked, and two children sprang into the path and tried to stop me.

I was too frightened to see who they were, but I heard one say, "Keep it straight!" I suppose I must have jerked the wheel sharply. Billy seemed to turn head over heels, and I was thrown ever so high in the air, and then fell into some bushes.

Now you must remember that I told you I was a naughty spoilt child, so as soon as I got over my fright, I began to be angry. Of course it was not my fault that Billy had run away, but Harold's and his sister's for startling me. I turned sulky, and then indignant that my friend had not come to pick me up. I heard afterwards that he had picked up the horse first, and then had not been able to find the exact spot where I had been thrown. He called, but I would not answer, and crawled away on my hands and knees till I came to a narrow path leading upward, when I began to run to get out of his reach.

"Now then! do you want to be shot?" said a man, popping his head out from behind an iron framed shelter. "Couldn't you see the flag flying? You just turn round and go back; there's your dog too. Be off, the pair of you!"

I was feeling stiff from my fall, but I pulled myself together and tried to look as dignified as I could with tumbled hair and great scratches on my face; then, whistling to Scamp, I walked away—only to hide in the bushes a few yards off though, for I had a plan in my head. The nearest way home was by the path in which the shelter stood, and I meant to go that way somehow.

The first thing was to get rid of my faithful dog, who would have followed me, and would be seen. I took my handkerchief out of my pocket, and gave it to Scamp and told him to carry it to tomher. The sensible creature looked at me with his head on one side, as if he were fairly puzzled at my sending him away, and stood quite still. I was, as you know, not used to anyone opposing me, and I am ashamed to say I kicked him, and said sharply, "Go home' sir!" With a piteous look in his eyes, he went, bearing my handkerchief in his mouth. Had I known the grief that handkerchief would cause, I should never have given it to him, especially as it was stained with blood which had come from the scratches on my face.

Directly Scamp had disappeared, I crept quietly along, keeping out of sight of the hut; when I had passed it, I stood up. Bang came a bullet on the iron roof. It made me jump, but it did not stop my purpose. Suddenly something struck me. For a second I put my hand to my side, thought of the kick I had given poor Scamp, and felt such a pang of regret as I had never felt before, then the ground seemed to give way, and I fell unconscious.

* * * * *

When I opened my eyes again, and had sense enough to look about me, I was in a strange room, my mother sat near me, and an old gentleman stood watching me.

Of course I wanted to ask a dozen questions, but my voice sounded so strange that I was rather glad when the gentleman, who was a doctor, gave me some milk and told me to lie still.

"You will be able to talk as much as you like presently, and tell us how you got that bullet in your side."

Then I remembered everything, and how bitterly ashamed I felt!

"There's the dog at the door again," said the doctor presently. At these woods I opened my eyes. Oh, if it were only poor Scamp.

"Please let him come in," I said to my mother, "I do want to—"

I couldn't say any more, for the tears choked me, and when Scamp came bounding on the bed I put my arm round him and sobbed till the doctor threatened to drive him away, for fear the wound should bleed again.

Then I felt mother's gentle forgiving kiss, and told her all that had happened.

"It is a marvel that you are alive," said the doctor. "I am a stranger here, or I should not have missed my way in the woods, and been walking in that dangerous place. I was standing in the shelter when the man ordered you away. I thought you did not look very much like obeying him, so when I heard a groan afterwards I thought it might be you. I crept out to see, not knowing whether I might not get a bullet in my head for my pains. I had just lifted you in my arms when that dog came up, looking as if he would like to swallow me. Your mother was close behind him in a nice state of fright, though I'm sure I don't think you are worth it, you young rascal. So between us we got you to my house, where you will have to stop sometime."

Whispering to mother how sorry I was for having grieved her so, she told me that she had spent a terrible morning. Harold's tale of my accident on the horse, and of his vain search for me, filled her with alarm. Then when Scamp arrived, dropping the blood-stained handkerchief at her feet, and taking her dress between his teeth to make her follow him, she quite made up her mind I had been killed.

"All's well that ends well," you know, and I am alive to tell you this tale, though it was not my fault that I was not killed. My mother kept for some years the bullet which the doctor had taken from my side, but when I was old enough to understand fully the wrong I had done, I begged her to let me have it, to remind me that rashness can never be courage, and disobedience can never be love.

An Enormous Endless Chain.

Up in the northwest wilderness of Maine some capitalists, who have bought the timber lands of seven townships, are constructing an enormous endless chain, worked by forty horse power engines, to convey their logs over, two thousand five hundred feet of decline to the waters of Carry brook, by which they are to be swept into Moosehead Lake, and eventually reach the mills at Gardiner by way of the Kennebec. The chain begins at the edge of a dam which has been formed across the Penobscot at Seboomook. Here the logs are collected. The chain is of steel, with links a foot long. Every eight feet there is a "chair," or a bar running across the chain, and on either end of the bar are iron standards to hold the log in place. The chain runs in a trough, and the log rests on the chain and is held in place by the iron standards. The motor power will be two forty-horse-power engines. One will be located in the center and one at the further end of the stretch, and it is believed that the chain will move at the rate of two hundred feet a minute. While this system of handling lumber is by no means novel, speeding an endless chain at any such a rate is new, but competent engineers pronounce it possible. It is expected that it will carry eight thousand pieces, or one million feet, every twenty-four hours. It is estimated that it will cost not far from twenty-five cents per thousand to carry the logs.

Gold Thread

The base of the gold thread of commerce is silver, which is brought from the Bank of England in cakes weighing about one thousand ounces. Gold leaf is carefully incorporated with the silver by hammering and afterward the whole is subjected to a charcoal fire. The bar is now ready for conversion into wire. This is accomplished by drawing it from one hundred to one hundred and fifty times through ever diminished holes in steel plates and finally, when the capabilities of this metal have been exhausted, through apertures in diamonds, rubies or sapphires. The delicate wire thus obtained must now be passed through the steel rollers of one of Herr Krupp's little flatting mills. This brings up to the final process—the spinning of the flattened wire round silk to form the golden thread of commerce. These spinning machines are worked by water, although two steam engines are to be found in the factory; for water power is considered to be more regular and even in its action.

We should rule ourselves with a firm hand. Being our own masters means often that we are at liberty to be the slaves of our own follies, caprices and passions.

What is placed on a table, often cut, but never eaten?—A pack of cards.

What the Red Squirrel Knows.

Few boys know as much about the hickory-nut as the common red, or Hudson Bay, squirrel knows. It supplies him with his favorite food both winter and summer, and for that reason, probably, he has given it close attention and knows its peculiarities as well as a scientist. In the autumn, when the nutting season begins, the squirrel prepares for his harvest, and like a good husbandman has both a barn and granary. His barn is a well-decayed log, with plenty of rotting leaves lying about it, and his granary a dry hollow in a tree.

When the proper time comes, he climbs the well-loaded shell-bark hickory, and begins to throw down the nuts by biting the twig to which each is attached. This slight shock is sufficient, when the nut is ripe, to send them rattling through the withering leaves to the ground. In an hour an industrious squirrel will shake down enough to keep himself busy for the remainder of the day. And when at work few animals are as industrious as the red squirrel.

As he runs out one branch after another and strips it of its nuts, he is very much in earnest, for his winter supply of provisions depends on his activity.

His next task is to carry the nuts to his barn, where he buries them among the leaves and under the decaying wood. This is done so that the moisture and the warmth will cause the thick outer husk to split and fall off.

When they have been buried for a week or ten days, it is found that each husk has split into four parts, which fall off as soon as the nut is moved. This process also enables the little harvester to separate the good nuts from the bad, and the husks on the wormy ones refuse to be loosened. The result is that the nuts he carries to his granary are all round and edible.

In the summer time his choicest food is the top root of the hickory seedling. The shellbark hickory tree—as any one who ever removed a stump knows—sends down into the earth, often to a considerable depth, a straight central root. When the seedling is but a few months old, and consists only of a twig and a few leaves, this root is quite soft and very sweet. This the squirrel knows, and it is his delight to dig up and eat the dainty morsels.

The Heating of Our Houses

The question of proper temperature for sitting and sleeping rooms depends upon a number of circumstances, says the Philadephia Times. To lay down an ironclad rule, and expect to fit all cases, is absurd. The rule in recent article that no room should be heated beyond a temperature of 98 degrees is a most excellent one for some people. Ice-cold baths are also absolutely necessary for continued good health, with some people. But it happenes in this world that while the temperature of one house is different from that of others it is because the temperament of one individual is different from that of others. At least this is generally the reason. Of course the necessity for pure air cannot be overstated; it is, in fact, our life.

But the fact should not be lost sight of that cold air is not necessarily pure air. Consequently the practice of opening up a warm room to let the coldest air of the winter rush through it like a blast from the north pole is by no means as healthy as it may seem to the "pure air" enthusiasts. Most of the colds, coughs, and pulmonary troubles of all sorts are caused by sudden changes in temperature, and hence it is desirable to avoid these sudden change.

The best way to do this, and at the same time pay proper attention to the purity of the atmosphere which is to be taken into the lungs, is to regulate the temperature of the room by means of a thermometer. These are so cheap nowadays that even the most economical can afford one or more, and, in fact, one in the winter is the most economical investment that can be made. If an open fireplace is used, very little other ventilation is necessary. If a closed stove is the heater, then the room should be ventilated some hour during the twenty-four when it is not occupied, and by ventilation is not meant refrigeration. Careful attention to these details may seem a little troublesome, but immunity from customary winter complaints will amply repay all the time and attention devoted to them.

Two Things in life are absolutely certain—death and sorrow; and these two, about which there is no contingent, alone possess the power to surprise us. All that is problematical we are ready for, and accept without lifting our eyebrows; but to the figure of sorrow, whose shadow falls athwart our path a few days' journey ahead, and death, who waits at its end, without clamor, since he is sure of us—to these we say, "It cannot be! it is impossible!" We count upon the uncertain, but the inevitable surprises us.
