NOW AND THEN

GRIM WAR

War brings suffering and privation to every citizen where war is waged A. A. Milne, the editor of Punch has written the following about the hardships of the sailors.

I have not paid the rent, I have not paid
The income-tax, the rates, or Mr. Wright:
And how is all this money to be made?
But I am not sailing the North Sea tonight.

It's far too cold. And now here comes the fog.
My underclothing is absurdly slight.
I know now how it feels to be a fog.
But I am not sailing the North Sea tonight.

They've rationed all the things I like to eat;
The things I drink they're taxing out of sight;
The things I want to say are not discreet.
But I am not sailing the North Sea tonight.

BEETHOVEN'S MOONLIGHT SONATA

It happened in Bonn, the birthplace of the great musical genius, Beethoven. His friend was walking with him one moonlight night, when all at once Beethoven stopped, "Listen" he said. Some one was playing Beethoven music. They drew near the house and heard a girl's voice saying, "Oh, I cannot remember any more. If I could only hear the great master." Then a man's voice replied. "You know you can never do it. We have barely enough for our food and to pay our rent."

Impulsively Beethoven mounted the creaking stairs and entered the room followed by his friend. It was lighted by a single candle and a young man was sitting by it mending shoes, while his sister sat at the piano with her face buried in her hands, weeping. Beethoven approached her, and then he saw she was blind.

"May I play for you," he said. She gladly yielded him her place at the piano, wondering who the stranger was. And so he sat down and played symphony after symphony while the girl sat by him enraptured. And then the candle sputtered and went out, leaving the room in darkness. His friend went to the window and threw open the shutter. The room was flooded with moonlight. And Beethoven began to play a sonato, composing it as his fingers went over the keys.

They all were entranced with the music and when he finished the girl cried "Oh, you are the great Master." while her brother fell on his knees before him. And thus Beethoven left them. When his friend urged him to go with him to his home, Beethoven said, "No, I must go to my room and write down this sonato, and thus he spent the night while the moon looked down upon him. And thus was born the "Moonlight Sonato" that has charmed so many music lovers all over the world.

This is Washington's birthday, the 22nd of February, first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen. One can truly say that, though so many of the early things which have been told about him have been torn to pieces by the iconoclosts of this day. And yet, I daresay, there will not be a feast given today that has not a hatchet and an abundant of cherries. So let us take Parson's Weem's story as authenic, and give the story tellers that delightful tale of the early bravery and truthfulness of our hero, Washington.

THE WIND

There is so much said of the great benefits of the wind, of the way it carries seed from place to place; how it levels and improves the soil, disintergrating the rocks, and adding to its fertility. It may be so. One is sure it is, but it is sometimes a very unpleasant remedy. When one has to face a Nor'wester one forgets the benefits that it is bringing and when one is going in the opposite direction and feels himself pushed from the back so he has difficulty in keeping upright then, too, he forgets the many uses of the wind.

March has encroached upon February and is giving a fore taste of wha to expect from his majesty. No wonder the month was named for the god of war, by the ancients.

They might not need me, but they might.
I'll let my head be just in sight;
A smile as small as mine might be
Precisely their necessity.

Emily Dickinson.

In Memoriam

In memory of our dear husband and father, John Ward, who departed this life Feb. 23, 1923.

Also for all our other dear ones.

As I loved you, so I miss you,
In my thoughts you are ever near
Loved, remembered, longed for always,
Brings many a silent tear.

Over the river, faces I see,
Fair as the morning, looking for me,
Free from their sorrows, grief and despair,
Waiting and watching patinetly there.

Loving Wife and Children.
