NOW AND THEN

IT DOES HAPPEN

The typographical error is a slippery thing and sly;
You can hunt till you get dizzy, but it somehow will get by.
Till the forms are off the presses it is strange how still it keeps;
It shrinks down into a corner, and it
never stirs or peeps,
That typographical error, too small
for human eyes,
Till the ink is on the paper, when
it grows to mountain size.
The boss, he stares with horror, then
he grabs his hair and groans;
The copy reader drops his head
upon his hands and moans—
The remainder of the issue may be clean as clean can be,
But that typographical error is the only thing you see.

The trials of Editor; the typographical errors. Who is to blame? Sometimes the proof reader often the linotype machine which insist upon dropping the wrong letter in spite of the operator's nimble fingers and often so often because no one can read the copy.

Horace Greeley, the famous editor of the "New York Tribune," wrote a hand that resembled hen scratches. One day the proof reader approached that irascible gentleman and asked him to read the copy for him. Mr. Greeley was furious, but found that he could not translate it himself. Yesterday in reading one of Dicken's works several such errors were found.

So ye readers, be more patient with the sorely tried newspaper men.

LITTLE TOT

His picture was in the paper the other day, a five year old boy, standing in line with the other husky workmen, waiting for his pay. For the boy gets two cents a day, paid him by the Superintendent from his own stipend. The city of Ackron, is laying pipes and digging ditches in the street where little Tot lives. He was lonely for his brothers were all at school so he went out to watch the workmen. Now he is a member of the force, and does all kind of work, that a little boy can do.

Although the work is near his home he takes his lunch box and eats with the men, and never leaves until the hour for quitting has come. "We are always careful about what we say before him, and I think he has done us a lot of good," said one of the workmen.

Next week they will go into another part of the city, but they are going to take him with them. Next year he will be six so he will have to go to school. "But I will work after hours," little Tot says.

TRUTHFUL ADVERTISING

Alfred E. W. Mason, the author, was on a train leaving Boston, when a newsboy approached him with an armful of books. He promptly offered Mr. Mason a copy of his own novel, "The Turnstile."

"I've read it," quietly replied the author, shaking his head.

"Oh, you have!" exclaimed the boy as a couple of passengers leaned forward to listen. "How did you like it?"

"Pretty well," said Mr. Mason. Then, thinking of the tedious hours spent in revisions of the manuscript and proofreading, he added impressively, "I read it five times."

"Five times," exclaimed the boy, and the two passengers promptly purchased copies, as the enterprising bookseller moved on through the car, saying, "The Turnstile'—just out; one man read it five times. Only a few copies left."

NOT VISIBLE

Once when George V of England was a young officer serving in a battleship, the vessel put into port at Nova Scotia for coal.

A prominent American politician, hoping to gain a glimpse of the Prince, obtained permission to go on board for a tour of inspection. He found the captain busy supervising the coaling process, and was given into the hands of one of the young officers who had been assisting in the work. Under the guidance of this modest but pleasant young man he made a complete tour of the great vessel.

At length he paused, and, looking into the begrimed face of his escort, inquired about the Prince.

"Isn't he to be seen today?" he asked.

"I am afraid," replied the young officer, "that his features won't be visible."

"Ah, I suppose," said the American, "you keep him wrapped up in a woolen blanket when a job like this is on."

The young officer only answered with a good-natured laugh.

Bidding farewell to the captain a little later, the visitor confided that his visit had been a perfect pleasure except for one detail—he had not seen the man he had wanted most to see—the Prince.

"The Prince!" exclaimed the captain: "Why, man, you've been with him for the last two hours!"

Apple Flapjacks To Accompany Pork

Apple Flapjacks to accompany pork chops or a roast are just about as grand and unusual an accompaniment as you could possibly want. Particularly since so many people do serve apples in some form with a pork roast. They are really worthy of any time required in their preparation.

APPLE FLAPJACKS
1 tablespoon shortening
1 tablespoon sugar
2 eggs
1½ cups flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 cup apples, chopped fine
Cinnamon
Milk

Cream the shortening and sugar, add the beaten eggs, the flour sifted with the baking powder and cinnamon, and the chopped apples. Then gradually add milk to make a medium batter. Bake on a griddle as for ordinary pancakes and serve in an overlapping row around a platter of pork chops, or serve either hot or cold. Cooked apples separately with roast pork, or a dry apple sauce may be used with batter in the same way.
