NOW AND THEN

UNHEARD

All things are wrought of melody
Unheard, yet full of speaking spells;
Within the rock, within the tree
A soul of music dwells.

To harmony all growth is set:
Each seed is but a music note,
From which each plant each violet
Evolve its purple note.

Compact of melody the rose
Woos the soft wind with strain on strain
Of crimson, and the lily blows
Its white stars to the rain.

The trees are paean, and the grass
One long green fugue beneath the sun;
Song is his life, and all shall pass,
Shall cease when song is done.

Madison Cowain

Is there anything more uplifting than music? And the radio has the power to bring good music into the humblest of homes. Many a musician has endeavored to inspire the public taste for this, notably among them Damrosch in his teaching of music appreciation. But in spite of their efforts much that is offending to those who love it gets over the broadcasting station.

Senator Wheeler one of those appointed by congress to look into what is going on by the radio said yesterday that something must be done to cut out these objectionable features and give the listeners-in good programs of news, music and literature.

Wolfgang Mozart, born at Salzburg, Austria, was perhaps the greatest musical genius of the world, but he was unfortunate in being an infant prodigy, at five years composing music. I say unfortunate for he was exploited by his father, who was so proud of him that he carried him from country to country showing off his wonderful talents. He was taken before kings and emperors who all acclaimed him a musical wonder, and he received flattering receptions every where. Kisses, constant applause and little gifts were showered upon him but he returned home no richer than when he set out. And thus his life was spent making beautiful music, but receiving little for all his work. Like most musical geniuses he spent his money as soon as he earned it, and lived in poverty. His wife was faithful and true but utterly incapable of making a comfortable home and the family was most often in want.

When he was quite young Hayden used to try to puzzle the youthful musician but he always found that Mozart could play anything his teacher gave him. One day Hayden gave him a very difficult piece ot play. Mozart tried it again and again. "It is impossible to do," said Mozart, "both hands are engaged at the ends and yet it seems to give a part to middle." "But it can be done," said Hayden and he sat down and played it using his nose for the middle part. It was the only time he was able to puzzle Mozart. It is sad to think of one so young and talented being so little appreciated during his life which was a very short one as he died in 1791 at the age of thirty-five years. When some time after his death some of his admirers wanted to visit his grave, even his wife could not tell where it was. But his music ha sgone down singing through the ages ,in opera, symphony and sacred music and posterity is giving him the appreciation which came to him after his death.

STRATFORD ON AVON

Every year there is a Festival in Stratford on Avon, the birthplace of Shakespeare where countless visitors come. Antique shops, book sellers, hotel, restaurants and even service stations use the poet's fame and name. Every body is eager to take the stranger around, showing the places of his birth and also Guild Chapel and Guild Hall where he went to school.

This year with the threat of a merciless invading army, many were opposed to having the festival knowing there would be no tourists to come, but those who wished to have it prevailed, and it is opened as usual, and it is a great surprise to find so many who have come.

To stand on Stratford Bridge and look down the Avon is to receive an indelible picture of an English landscape of surpassing beauty, with the spire of Shakespeare's church rising skyward above the tall trees and the placidly flowing river winding its way into the blue distance. It was well, indeed, that such a poet was born in such a town with such surrounding beauty and that he should have grown up in this land of green fields, leafy woodlands, and beautiful streams, that he could store up early memories of vagrant days, spent in sylvan solitudes and by river banks, with which to stud his work with imageries of rural beauty, of flowers and storms, and the songs of birds.

His birthplace in Hanley Street, although considerably restored in 1875, represents with fair accuracy the house as it stood at the time of the poet's birth. Thi shouse is now a museum. The walls, ceilings, and windows are covered with numerous signatures, written by pilgrims through the ages. Among this strange collection of autographs, those of Izaak Walton, Thomas Carlyle, and Sir Walter Scott may still be seen.

An effiency engineer was on his way to the mountains to teach the people to be more efficient. He was met by a mountaineer, who tucked him in the buggy and wrapped him in a buffalo robe, "Don't you know that if you turn the fur inside, it will make it warmer," the visitor said. So it was done. Not being accustomed to riding such a distance in the cold the engineer shivered and found his teeth chattering while the mountaineer, immuned to hardship seems very comfortable. Then he began to laugh. "Why are you laughing?" shivered his guest, "Wall I was thinking what a fool that buffalo was not to have worn that skin with the fur inside, just as we are doing."

Washington's Farewell Address

Washington's "Farewell Address" was written primarily to eliminate himself as a candidate for a third term. It was never read by the President in public, but printed in Claypoole's American Daily Advertiser, Philadelphia, September 19, 1796. The address is in two parts. In the first Washington definitely declines a third term, gives reasons, and acknowledges a debt of gratitude for the honors conferred upon him and for the confident support of the people. In the second, more important part, he presents, as a result of his experience and as a last legacy of advice, thoughts upon the government.

Taxes on Motorists

Motor car owners pay a total annual tax bill of $1,320,000,000 on oil, gas and license plates, according to an estimate by the League of Women Buyers and Taxpayers. This is more than manufacturers get for new cars in a year.
