NOW AND THEN

OCTOBER

October comes with Master Artists hand
In crimson sumack, purple aster glow,
He spills his pigments over all the land
Sets golden pumpkins shining row on row.
His painted banners streaming far and wide
Bright pagentry of all the world has been
Cascading down the pine clad mountain side
Valleys in flood with iridiscent sheen.

Spring daffodills, June roses, Autumn sheaves,
Transmitted in the tapestry he weaves,
So prodigal of beauty, so intense
Intoxicating with delight each sense
Of soul and body, Earth and sky and sea
Reflect the radiance of divinity.

ART APPRECIATION WEEK

This is Art Appreciation Week, and judging from the faces of the spectators they surely showed appreciation of the Art displayed. It began last Sunday in the spacious Library at Washington College when a delightful tea was served. Artists hands had arranged the pictures on the walls, a display that made the onlookers proud that there were so many local artists around.

There was a minor in the note of joy, that the spectators expressed when they looked at the works of the late Emma Ingersoll. It almost seemed that she was there among the crowds. Hers was a poetic artist soul.

Many fine pictures were there among the group but I dare not mention them for fear that I might leave out some of the finest, but "I gazed and gazed but little thought, what wealth the show to me has brought."

As I walked down the avenue, another picture, the work of the Master painter's hand, of whose works there can be no criticism, was spread out before me. Autumn in her golden light had painted bush and tree with gorgeous colors sumac and barberry bushes glowed red, while trees of gold everywhere met one's view.

The Normandy poplars on Barroll's shore seem to exult in their beauty as they see themselves reflected in the blue waters of the cove.

They say our Country is on the brink of war. Should it come and mar our landscape as it has in England, the memory of this Autumn's beauty would still remain.

Reinald Werrenrath, the famous American baritone, was singing in a small city in Wisconsin. The club sponsoring the concert had provided neatly printed programs which, in addition to the list of selections to be rendered, carried the names of all the officers and directors of the club, the name of the dealer who had supplied the piano, and other information they considered pertinent to the performance. They had omitted one little item.

When the applause which greeted Mr. Werrenrath's initial appearance on the platform had subsided, the distinguished singer remarked pleasantly to his uadience.

"Anyone interested in learning the name of the evening's artist will find it in tomorrow's papers."

Thackery, the great English writer, on his visit to America was delighted with the ready wit and response of the Americans. One day, he had lost his way in New York and meeting a small boy who was poorly dressed, but walking with a swagger, he asked him if he could find his way to Houston in that direction. "Well, I guess so, Sonny, if you behave yourself." On his return to England, he persuaded his friend, a Kentuckyian to return with him. On the morning after their annival, Thackery asked his visitors of he had walked around to see the sights. "O, no." was the reply, your country is so small, I was afraid of falling off into the water." That remands one of an anecdote, told about Rhode Island.

"The late Senator Lippett of Rhode Island was frequently reminded that he represented the smallest state in the Union.

"One day he conducted three cotton merchants through one of his great cotton mills. He started at the point where the raw cotton came into the plant and, moving slowly through the vast mill, pointed out the various steps in the manufacture until the finished cloth was delivered to the shipping room.

"One of the visitors, a stout, red-faced gentleman, dropped down wearily upon a packing case and said "Senator, there's one question I'd like to ask you."

"What's that?" inquired Lippett.

"Are we still in the State of Rhode Island?"

To save cleaning, brass and copper articles not used with food could have a thin shellac covering, like furniture.

Fresh milk, if it has never dried, may be removed wit hclear water To control spreading, use a folded pad under the stain, removing pad each time stain is treated.

Use tomato juice instead of water with lemon-flavored gelatin. Add shredded cabbage and minced onion before gelatin sets. Serve in squares on lettuce or keep on hand for a cold meat garnish.

To dust sugar on hot doughnuts, and ot get on evenly, shake the doughnuts in a paper bag containing powdered or granulated sugar. There is no waste of sugar this way and no spilled sugar to be wiped up.

If you should want to use a decorative flower pot (the type with a hole in the bottom) for a flowre bowl or vase, try this: Fill the hole first with chewing gum and then secure the chewing gum with adhesive tape. As a result of this treatment, the vase will hold water for almost an indefinite period of time.

Sausage served in combination with fruit is an excellent addition to any meal. It lends itself to many ways of serving; it not only comprises a dish in itself, but also adds flavor and zest to a number of other food combinations.

Brown Chicken Stew

2 broiling size chickens
3 tablespoons butter
1 cup cooking sherry
2 small onions
1 branch parsley
1 stalk celery
½ bay leaf
1 coffeespoon curry powder, scant
2 egg yolks
2 tablespoons browned flour

Disjoint the chicken as for frying. Put the butter in a saucepan, and when it is melted add the pieces of chicken, which have been rubbed lightly with salt and pepper. Let cook over a low fire until the chicken takes a good brown color on both sides. Sift in 1 tablespoon of the flour which has been browned in the oven; mix well with the butter and chicken and then add 2 cups of water, onions parsley, celery, bay leaf, and the curry dissolved in the sherry. Beat the yolks of the eggs until perfectly smooth with the remaining flour and a tablespoon fo cold water. Remove the pieces of chicken from the sauce and arrange them on a hot platter. Pour the egg mixture into the sauce and allow to thicken over the fire for a moment. Strain, pour over the chicken, and serve. This is not meant to be a curry dish. There should not be enough to make the taste unrecognizable.
