How Peanuts Grow.

Most residents of the north have wholly erroneous ideas about the way in which peanuts grow. If questioned on the subject, nine persons out of ten would probably declare with confidence that this favorite luxury of circus going youth is a root development, much as potatoes are. That peanuts, when ripe, are dug out of the earth is true, but they begin operations in the air and never have anything to do with the roots of their parent vine. From a bulletin issued by the department of agriculture is gleaned the following information on this interesting subject:

"The blossom of the peanut is at the end of a long, pedicellike calyx tube, the ovary being at the base. After the fall of the flower, the peduncle, or 'spike,' elongates and bends downward, pushing several inches into the ground, where the ovary at its extremity begins to enlarge and develops into a pale, yellowish, wrinkled, slightly curved pod, often contracted in the middle, containing from one to three seeds. Should the 'spike' by accident not be enabled to thrust its point in the ground within a few hours after the fall of the flower it withers and dies.

"More or less abundantly scattered over the roots of the peanut plant are warts about the size of a pinhead, or larger. These tubercles, as they are usually called, play a very important part in the life history of the plant. Within them, while in a fresh or growing state, may be seen, by the aid of a good microscope, myriads of very minute organisms. These bacteria-like bodies live partly on the substance supplied from the roots, but at the same time they take from the air and elaborate for the use of the plant considerable quantities of nitrogen. Nitrogen is the most expensive element that must be supplied to plants in fertilizers. The organisms living in these porous tubercles take it abundantly from the air, of which it comprises about five-sixths, and supply it to the plant without any cost. In this way a total amount of nitrogen is often acquired by the plant far in excess of the amount analyses show to be present and available in the soil.

"Like many other extensively cultivated plants, the peanut has not been found in a truly wild state, and hence it is difficult to fix upon its habitat. So widely has it been cultivated in eastern countries that some botanists have attempted to trace its spread from China and Japan, thence through the East Indian islands to India, and thence to Africa, where in the seventeenth century it was so extensively cultivated and had become such an important article of native food that the slavedealers loaded their vessels with it, using it as food for their cargoes of captives. But the weight of authority seems to be in favor of accepting it as a native of Brazil, thus adding the peanut to the four other plants of commercial importance that America has contributed to the agriculture of the world—namely, cotton, Indian corn, potato and tobacco. Though it may be a native of the western continent, it early became a largely cultivated plant in the warmers portion of the world, occupying a distinct place in the agriculture of those countries long before its merits were recognized in the land of its origin."

No More Old Age.

A French physician makes the announcement that he has discovered the microbe of old age and gives the results of some experiments tending to prove that his discovery is invested with all the importance that such a revelation merits.

The microbe he has discovered is not only found alone in the blood of aged people, but if it is injected into the veins of a young person it produces at once all the physical manifestations of senility.

But Dr. Brisson goes a good ways further and declares that the injection of a certain serum, which he has also found, destroys these microbes in the blood of an aged person, and that, barring accidents and disease, a man may live indefinitely so long as the microbes can be destroyed in the blood.

It may, therefore, be possible that we are on the borders of another Methuselan age, and it is probable that the reason for the remarkable longevity of the patriarchs in the Old Testament times may be due to the fact that the "old age microbe" had not been developed, and so Methuselah and Noah kept living because an electric car did not run over them or the vermiform appendix did not get on the rampage and carry them off.

But in the improved facilities for killing people in these days of grade crossing, trolley cars and bicycles, it is really necessary that something should be done to give a man half a chance for existence, especially with this microbe galloping up and down in his veins, puckering up his face, destroying his eyesight and eliminating his teeth, so that in the youthful days hovering about the end of his four score years he breaks down and dies not because of old age but because he has his blood full of microbes.

A Hubbub in Facetown.

From The Household.

The first to notice anything wrong was neighbor Nose, who, living just across the street and on a hill, could not help noticing that there was something awful going on over the way. So he called to Mr. Chin, who lived on the edge of town, just back, to look and see; and Chin declared that he could scarcely see the smooth top of neighbor Nose's head for the frightful actions of the Lips, just between them. Then Mrs. Cheek heard the commotion, and, it is said, grew pale with alarm at what she saw, and ran back to the ears to tell them, causing them to stand on tiptoe to see the dreadful sight. On the other side of the street Nose blew his trumpet to sound the alarm. Master Eyes were awakened out of a sound sleep by it, and looking down that way, were horrified to see two strange red objects, just around the corner from Nose, which they had never seen before. They called to Eyebrows, and they arched themselves to get a better view of the startling sight, while Forehead, wrinkled himself until he almost went into fits; and it is said that a number of Hairs wanted to stand straight up so that they could look over at the frightful doings in Facetown, which no one could explain or understand until Mr. Tongue came out of his door through two rows of white, scared Teeth and told them not to be alarmed. It was only their mistress pouting because she could not do as she wanted to.

Happy is the man who sees his folly in his youth.

Big Slaughter in Wall Paper.

MY PRICES RANGE FROM 12c. TO 30c. PUT ON WALL. GILT 20c. TO 25c. ALL PAPER 8 YARDS LONG

These are not living prices. You may say how do I live. I have no rent to run a store and fuel, &c., and do all of my own work. I don't pay any hands one year to do three months' work in season. This is a chance to get papering done cheap. Take advantage while you have a chance. I will do as before, done by me. I can give the best references in the county.

Guarantee All Work

There has been a great deal said about me being a scaly workman, but it was only said by those who can't compete with me in price and workmanship and who are afraid of me—never by a party that I did work for. Write for sample and price, or I will come to see you in person and tell you what your job will cost. I can be found 300 yards from the limit of Westminster on the Littlestown turnpike.

Thankful for past favors, Very Respectfully, jun-28 L. GLADHILL.
