Extract of a letter from R. G. Hite, Esq. Adjutant General of the 10th Military Division, to the Author, in reply to a note in which was enclosed a copy of the "Manual Exercise"

"BALTIMORE, Nov. 19, 1814.

"Your 'Manual Exercise,' in the form it now appears before me, I think is calculated to be of use to those who will give it a perusal, with a view to acquire a knowledge of the Manual. It might, in my opinion, be made of more extensive utility, by being circulated in its present shape among the non commissioned officers of the army, as the system of military discipline which will soon make its appearance, for the government of our ranks will be too voluminous and too costly for their means and for the little time (while in camp) that they have to devote to improvement by reading

R. G. HITE."

A True Likeness of NAPOLEON THE GREAT.

The HAT, represents the Prussian Eagle, who has taken hold of Napoleon, without any hope of his release.
The FACE, is formed of a few of the many thousand victims, who fell a sacrifice to his great thirst of glory.
The COLLAR, is the great effusion of blood occasioned by his unlimited ambition.
The COAT, is a piece of the map representing the Confederation of the Rhine. Napoleon lost battles on all the places marked thereon.
The STAR, was but a Spider's web, whose threads were spread all over Germany; but in the EPAULETTE, is seen the hand of the Almighty destroying the web, and killing the Spider who had taken its seat there, where a good heart ought to have been.
