gotten the estrangement.

Rose, dumb with agony, white and miserable was in her own room.

"I cannot go, I cannot," she said, but in a moment she rose and pushed back her braids, and stepped across the lawn.

Rosie looked up in her face, her blue eyes dry. "Will you hold me, Rose? They heve killed Harry;" and the stronger girl, the girl who loved him to, and who had betrayed him to a shameful death, took the gentle, suffering body in her strong arms and held it.

It was mid-afternoon when down the street came the sound of fifes and the solumn roll of drums. Aunt Cely looked out of the window, with a cry of "Oh, my sufferin' Jesus!" put her apron over her head and rocked in hysterics on the stairs. The soldiers were marching around the cart in which Wrenn sat, bound, on his way to the scaffold. The colonel had decided to make an example of him.

"What is it?" Rosie asked drowsily. They had given her opiates until her senses were dull.

Rose spoks rapidly, her breath coming in gasps. "It is Harry's funeral," she said. "They are giving him a military funeral. He was a hero, and even the Northern soldier honors him. Will you let me go? I must take some—flowers."

Rosie began to cry weakly, and Rose put her down and ran from the room. She rushed past Cely on the stairs like a wild thing, her lip caught in her teeth. There was only one horse there, her father's fierce colt, which no woman had ever mounted. With strong hands the bit was pushed into his mouth, and springing to his bare back, Rose whipped him to his highest speed. There was a meadow between the Allens' house and the camp. She must cross it, and get back to that awful wooden frame behind the hill, before—— She must not think. The horse rose like a bird to the fences, his hoofs fairly eating the ground under them. Sentries tried to stop her at the edge of the camp; one grasped her bridle, but the half wild horse tore loose. Her hair was falling about her bare neck when she dropped at the door of the colonel's tent.

He sat, grave as ever, writing at his camp table. Rose fell to the ground before him, while he stood up bewildered.

Her voice was husky with emotion.

"Reprieve Wrenn," she said, "and telegraph the President—he always spares a life!" And then, as if his understanding were too slow for her eagerness, she shook at his hand. "Write it! They are killing him now!"

"Why do you care?"

She heard suspicion in his voice.

"He is to marry my friend, and I love her," she replied.

For an instant they stared into each other's eyes. Then Rose's fell.

"I ask you this in the name of my love for you," she said.

The coionel turned toward the door.

"Fire a signal, and run up a flag that the execution is delayed. Make haste," he said to the officer who stood there.

Cora—How do you like kissing in the dark?"

Dora—Oh, splendidly! It's out of sight!

TAKE CARE OF THE TOOLS.

Take care of the farm implements and machinery. It would seem that no warning is necessary on this point, but it would surprise the general reader if he were traveling over the country to note the evidences of carelessness that are so often seen. The provident and painstaking farmer has a place for his implements where he sees to it that they are housed and properly cared for when they are no longer required in the cultivation of crops. His improvident neighbor sometimes leaves his implements where they were used last or about his premises, without shelter. Even his harvester or mowing machine is left in the field long after it has been used, subjected to all kinds of weather and inevitable injury. The cost of repairs is necessarily increased under such inexcusable neglect, and the period when a new machine will be necessary is much shortened. The care of tools is an important factor in farm economy, and a word in season, while not necessary for the provident man, may be serviceable to such as are too remiss in this direction.

When the lambs come, which should be this month and next, every ewe which produced twins, and provided plenty of nourishment, should be retained, unless too old, and the ewe lambs retained will be more productive in future if from such dams. The prolificacy of a flock may be considerably increased by thus selecting the breeding ewes.

It's a deep mystery—the way the heart of man turns to one woman out of all that he's seen in the world, and makes it easier for him to work seven years for her, like Jacob did for Rachel, sooner than have any other woman for the asking.

Who should grow berries? First of all, farmers everywhere, for family use. Farmers must grow berries or do without. No one can grow them so cheaply as he.

She—The Druids thought the mistletoe a charm against disease.

He (sighing)—It may have been then, but it's a bad thing for heart trouble nowadays.

"What's a dictionary, Chris?"

"Oh, it's a book where you look up the words that other people don't know the meaning of."

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!
I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the Finest and Cheapest Lines of WALL PAPER
ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always the principles. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store, therefore I have no opposition. If you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar in wall paper.
