THIRTY CANS OF SARDINES IS FOOD FOR STOW-AWAY FOR THIRTY-FIVE DAYS

Youngster, Found Hidden In Steamship Lying Off County Water Front Existed On Fish And Bucket Of Water For Over Month.

Thirty-five days at sea on 30 cans of sardines.

That was the story told customs officials by Menaseo Sabitch, a youthful stowaway on board the Italian steamship Nelda, lying off the Baltimore county water front, from Trieste.

The customs officials were searching the ship for contraband liquor. They found no liquor Instead, they discovered the stowaway.

Sabitch told them he lived in Dalmatia, on the shores of the Adriatic. He longed to see his brother in Keyport, Pa. He had no money for passage. He decided to stow away.

Thererupon he set about laying in a food supply. This consisted of the 30 cans of sardines. In addition he had a few tins of canned meat and a bucket of water

The customs authorities understood how, by eating sparingly, he was able to make the sardines hold out for the voyage. But they were unable to understand how he managed to make a single bucket of water last throughout the trip.

Sabitch said nothing when the matter was mentioned. Members of the crew winked at one another knowingly. The customs officials let it go at that. They were not unduly curious. No possible charge of smuggling was involved.

Nevertheless the youth, after his 35-day repast of sardines among the magnesite and general cargo carried by the ship, was sent to jail to await deportation when the ship sails on the return voyage to Italy

Meanwhile he will not have to eat sardines. He will have soup, coffee, beans and bread—choice tidbits of prison fare.

COW'S APPETITE FOR IRON KILLS ANIMAL.

When a milk cow belonging to a farmer in the "upper end" of Baltimore county commenced to fail in weight and milk he called a veterinarian The veterinarian gave it as his opinion that "some sharp object" had found its way into the cow's stomach and was making its way toward her heart.

The veterinarian said nothing could be done, and the cow would die. She did die shortly thereafter and the diagnosis was verified by the finding in her stomach of several tacks, a number of shingle nails, a piece of wire, a six-penny nail and a fence staple.

DECISION IS WITHHELD IN CASE.

After two days' trial the case of Edward H. Harrington closed. No decision was announced. He was charged with obtaining money under false representations in connection with stock promotions

The accused is president and promoter of the Sparrows Point Coal, Ice and Wood Company. He was charged with obtaining $10,0000 from John F. Bledsoe and George L. Krebs. He was defended by Robert F. Leach, Jr., attorney.
