The Question That Concerns You.

DO YOU GET AS MUCH FOR YOUR DOLLAR AS YOU OUGHT?

DO YOU GET AS GOOD GOODS AS YOU OUGHT FOR YOUR MONEY?

HAVE YOU EVER COMPARED WHAT YOU BUY AT OTHER PLACES WITH WHAT YOU GET FROM US?

WE INVARIABLY GET THE BETTER OF THE COMPARISON.

We can't conceive of any better selected, more tasty line of light weight Wool Goods than the one from which we have been supplying our customers for past weeks.

In Waist Silks, Dress Silks, Trimming Silks and Black Silks

the selection is large, the styles varied, and the prices pleasing. Yankee wit and ingenuity must certainly have been exhausted in fashioning Percales and Wash Fabrics. Never before has such a bewildering maze of brand new ideas been presented to the public. We have organdies made in America hard to tell from the French, price one-half.

The Clothing, Hat and Shoe Departments show even more than their wonted activity. We have searched the markets for the best, the latest and most durable and the shelves of these departments show that they more than maintain the high standard of excellence usual to them.

If you are going to cover you floor, if only with straw, let us give you information in regard to it. We have plenty of good clean straw in the shape of Matting at prices that puts it within reach of all.

Many Carpets yet at old tariff prices.

CHAPTER 450.

AN ACT to authorize the Board of County School Commissioners of Carroll County to refund to George B. Yantis, late of Carroll county, Maryland, sixty-five dollars, less five per centum, for money paid by him for an unused hotel liquor license issued in said Carroll County.

Whereas, George B. Yantis, late of Carroll County, Maryland, paid the sum of one hundred dollars to the Clerk of the Circuit Court for said Carroll County for a hotel liquor license for the year 1896, commencing on the first day of May of said year 1896, and said George B. Yantis, afterwards, to-wit, on the first day of June, 1896, removed from the premises in which said hotel business was to have been conducted, to Pennsylvania, and no use or benefit was had by him from said license, save and except the month of May, and the sum of seventy-five dollars, less five per centum of said license money, was by law paid by said Clerk of said Court to the said School Commissioners; therefore,

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Board of School Commissioners of Carroll County be, and it is, hereby authorized to refund and repay to George B. Yantis, the sum of sixty five dollars, less five per centum.

Section 2. And be it enacted therefore, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

BATTLE PRAYER

BY FRANCIS H. TABOR.

O God, at whose supreme behest
The clang of war may sound or cease,
May we but fight that gentle peace
On Cuba's isle once more may rest.

If thought of dark revenge allure,
Or pride of place, or idle boast,
In Freedom's name purge Thou our host,
And make their motives just and pure!

Keep Thou our banner free from stain,
Its stripes like rays of morning light,
Its stars as clear and crystal bright,
As those which deck Thy winter train.

And in the din of war's alarm,
When love's soft voice is hard to bear,
Let tender mercy hover near
To drop her two-fold healing balm.

So shall our country ever be
The same as when in battle bold
She fought as giants fought of old;
But fought for peace and liberty.

Select Story.

DAVY'S DECISION.

The doctor said, as he came out of the room softly and shut the door:

"We have only the boy to think of now, Mrs. Page.

"Yer don't mean to say she's dead, doctor?"

"Yes, I do." The doctor sat down by the stove. "And it's a cold night to die, Mrs. Page."

"We'll be having the funeral by Monday, I suppose. I'll have to go down to Debby's and borrow a black cape. I don't know where the money will be coming from for the funeral; and as for that boy—"

"You be good to the boy until to-morrow, Mrs. Page, and I'll see what's to be done." The doctor went over to the corner of the room and pulled the cotton comforter over the fat legs of a boy of four, fast asleep.

"What did his father bring him here for, anyway, and then go off and leave him?—his mother too sick to take any notice of him, except the fust time she saw him; then she went on like mad. I had to call in Mrs. Dewey to help to keep her in bed. She was for following him right out into the garden. Said as how she'd like to see him in the sunshine. And now she's dead, I ain't going to do nothing more."

The doctor walked down the hill in the cold wind, turning over in his mind the different people in the village who he thought would be likely to welcome Davy into their household. Mrs. McArthur, though she had five children, might take him. There were the Thompsons—Jake, a lazy fellow, and Mrs. Thompson doing all the work. They were both fond of children, with no children of their own, and one adopted girl already. The Cassetts! They had lost their only child a few months before. He would see them tomorrow.

"Yer know, Milly, they do say the doctor's looking for some one to take care of Davy. He says it ain't possible to leave him with old Mrs. Page, she treats him so bad. Poor little chap!"

Jake put his foot on the edge of the stove and tilted back his chair as he hugged up closely the child in his arms.

"How'd yer like a little brother to play with, Kitty?"

"Now, Jake Thompson, don't yer be talking that way to Kitty. You know we can't take that child, and you out of work most of the summer, and me away all day at the hotel. I've wanted a boy all my life. But this ain't the time to take one in."

"I'll look in at the doctor's on my way back, and see what he says. Kit's a nice gir', Milly; I love her, God knows, but a son, Milly!"

He stooped and kissed her—a rare thing—and Milly, tired as she was, put the little adopted girl to bed, and cleaned up the house as for a wedding.

Jake found the men of the village around a smoky lamp at the back of the store, looking over the mail.

"Expectin' a letter, Jake?" asked McArthur.

"Well, no, I ain't no expectations in that line, and Jake chuckled to himself and thought of the little round-faced boy.

"The doc's got a pile of 'em."

"Letters or boys?" asked Jake.

"What's the matter with Jake? The doctor ain't got no boys. His are all girls. Letters of course."

"There's nothing like a boy, ef I do say it."

"Little you know about it, Jake."

"I'll know more afore I'm through with it, though. The doctor been around to-night? Milly and I are thinking about—little—Davy."

"Well, that's like you, Jake. Such a man for lonesome young uns I never see. We've only got five, you know, but bless me, if Nelly didn't talk it over with me last night. I kind of sat on it, but if I remember right, she had her way, as usual, and said she'd see the doctor."

"Guess I'll get there fust, Mac. Where's my hat?" and Jake started for the door.

"Hold on, Jake," said Cassett; "I've got something to tell yer all. Ain't yer heard about Davy?" Yer know the doctor spoke to me. I guess he thought he'd have trouble to find anyone to take the lad, and yer know how we've been kind and lonesome and sad since the boy died. And Hattie—well, first she wanted him and then she didn't and we didn't know what to say. She didn't like to think of filling the other one's place, and yet she had plenty of time to look after the boy, and it would make it less lonesome for her. So I kept telling her, and we were eating dinner, and Hattie crying a little—women always do cry when they feel a little bad—when the door opened, and who came walking in but Davy, with his dirty dress and his curly head and his face all wet with crying! 'Well, Davy,' I said, 'where did you come from?'

"'I come down from Gran's. I don't like it up there. Say, can I have some dinner? I hungry. You have some good dinner every day?'

"'Every day, Davy,' said Hattie, a-piling things up on his plate.

"'Think I'll stay,' Davy said; and boys, I kind of think he will. Ef you could see him, his face shining clean, asleep in the crib, and Hattie sitting by hims just as she sat by the other boy—"

"I guess you have the fust right, Cassett," said Jake, as he moved toward the door. "Yer—see—you've had a boy."

Wide-Tire Carriages.

From the New York Ledger.

An improvement in the wide tires, about which to much has been said of late, is in building the vehicle with the front axle about an inch shorter than those ordinarily used, and the rear axle an inch to an inch and one-half longer. This gives from two to two and one-half inches difference in the space between the fore wheels and the hind wheels. In running the two wheels make a track or line, nearly double the width of one. Allowing the tire to be four inches wide, the mark on the roadway will be from seven and a half to eight inches wide. The practical value of this style of wheel can scarcely be appreciated. Instead of deep cuts and ruts, which are a menace to all vehicles, we would have an approximately smooth road surface, and the soil would be much less likely to become cut up and soft. These wheels would act like rollers. They would crush down ruts and irregularities, and have a constant tendency to keep the road in order, rather than destroy it. It is suggested that a law be passed compelling wide tires on light as well as heavy vehicles. A skeleton wheel with a wide tire might be made extremely handsome. The felloe could be thin and light, and the spokes braced from the edges of the wheels in such a fashion as to secure the greatest strength and durability. It is predicted that once the wide tire fancy for light vehicles gets started, it will speedily push all old-fashioned, narrow-tired wheels out of the market.

Critic—Where did you get the idea of that story?

Author—Out of my head.

Critic—Gracious, how glad you must be that it's out.

A Beautiful New Silk.

Washington Letter in Boston Transcript.

Some very remarkable bugs are being hatched and reared just at present by the experts of the government bureau of entomology at Washington. Most people would suppose that there were enough insects in existence without resorting to artificial propagation, but the fact is that this kind of scientific work has a very useful purpose in view; this, too, notwithstanding the fact that the species selected for breeding are the most pestiferous that can be found.

The bug hatchery, or "insectary," as it is called, is a brick building close by the department of agriculture. In construction it resembles a greenhouse, the upper part being of glass, so as to admit plenty of light for the insects. It is divided into two compartments, one of which is artificially heated for the benefit of tropical and other species that require warmth, while the other is cold. On shelves all around the interior and on the floor as well are glass jars and queer glass sided boxes containing a great variety of odd looking objects.

The objects in the glass jars are parts of plants, fruits, dried up vegetables, pieces of branches or roots, etc. One does not see any bugs at all, and the reason why is simply that the vegetables, fruits and so forth are the natural food of the insects, and the latter are either inside of them or else are "done up" in cocoons for the winter.

For example, there is a huge cocoon nine inches long hanging from a twig in a jar of exceptional size. This is the temporary communal dwelling built by the so called "gregarious butterfly" in Mexico. More correctly speaking, it is the catterpillars—transformed later into butterflies—that construct the cocoon for a residence while they are undergoing their metamorphosis. The cocoon looks and feels as if made of thick parchment, and at the lower end of it is a small hole that serves for a door.

The labor employed in building it must be enormous. Under a powerful magnifying glass it is seen to be composed of an infinite number of shining and very slender silken threads, crossing each other in every direction. When cut into, the nest is found to contain 100 or more chrysalids, attached to the walls on the inside—each one representing a future butterfly.

The habit of combining together to build a house seems to be peculiar to this species among butterflies. The silk composing the nest is exquisite, and from 20 to 25 sheets of it can be stripped off from the great cocoon, looking as if woven in a loom. If the silk could only be spun, the "gregarious butterfly" would soon displace the silkworm, and the silks and satins of commerce would be of butterfly manufacture. Unfortunately the difficulty remains unsolved, though many attempts in this direction have been made. Could a solution of the problem be found, silk would become at once enormously less costly, inasmuch as the cocoons of this kind of butterfly are to be gathered in immense numbers as a wild crop in the forests of Mexico.

Crimson Clover.

A contributor to The National Stockman, writing from Pennsylvania concerning crimson clover, says: "It gives no promise of coming into general use even next the borders of New Jersey and Delaware. The chief trouble is the uncertainty of a catch or of a good fall growth. The seedings fail too often to let it become the reliance of the farmers as a winter cover crop. In portions of Delaware and New Jersey it does finely, but in Pennsylvania and Ohio crimson clover will not displace other manural crops to any great extent."

"How can I get an article in your paper?" asked a correspondent of a Western journal. "It all depends on the article you want to get into our paper," replies the editor, "If the article is small in bulk, like a hair brush or a tea caddy, spread the paper out on the floor, and placing the article in the centre, wrap it up carefully folding the edges over it, and tie with a string. This will keep the article from slipping out of the paper. If, on the other hand, the article is an English bathtub or a clothes horse, you would better not try at all."
