Gwinnett cooled off instantly—he was only a grown-up boy; and, jumping off the table, he said:

"Correct, Bubby; now you're talking! Let's get a bite, and drive up Riverside way."

It was evening. Mr. Gwinnett had gone to the theater, leaving his friend to recover from his headache. He sat in the dusk, tho his room was full of reflected light from the street below. All day long he had been in a singular state of anticipation, behind which there was lurking apprehension. His head throbbed, he had had turns of dizziness, and a flashing of red before his eyes. His idea trains were broken and incoherent.

"I'd better pack," he thought, glad of any physical effort; and he went into Gwinnett's room—the connecting door stood open—to collect his things. He turned on the light, and began sorting the numerous parcels thrown on the table. There was a pasteboard box, with Tiffany's name upon it. He opened it and took out a large silver dog-collar. Gwinnett had not bought it, and it was not his. Why, it must belong to that boy. He held it idly a moment, and then his eye caught a spray of mistletoe beaten in the silver. "The name, 'Baldur,' is on the other side," he thought. He turned it around. Yes, there it was! God in Heaven, how did he know? He trembled so he fell into the nearest chair. His heart beat against his ribs, the cold sweat stood upon his brow as he asked himself the question. Then from underneath came the answer, as the dead self rose from its grave, and God said, "Loose him, and let him go."

Baldur was his dog, and this was Baldur's collar. He had had it made in Sweden, in Lund. The quaint old peaked-roof shop, the silversmith and the some one who was with him. Some one who was young and beautiful and who loved him! His bride, Barbara! A rending groan burst from him, and his head fell forward on the table, but his hand still clutched the collar. One after another the mist curtains rolled away, little by little the lost years came back. Thanks be to God, there were no awful guilt-spots upon this risen self of his, in this his Day of Judgment.

He saw a happy, sheltered childhood, flowing into the enthusiasm of youth, and the steady purpose of manhood. He saw himself responding gladly to his country's call, tho Barbara and the baby clung about him. Then the long list of battles burned their way through his memory, ending with Atlanta.

Some one opened the door quietly and came in,

"Jim, are you sick?" called Gwinnett, anxiously. The face that was raised to his was so distorted by anguish that it was almost the face of a madman.

"Walton, Walton, I know who I am. It has all come back! I am Francis Trumbull, of New Haven. For God's sake bring my wife, quick!"

He rose to his feet, took one reeling step, then fell his full length upon the floor.

"I don't like the looks of things, at all," said the hotel doctor, a few hours later. "We'll get a nurse here in the morning, and I'd like to consult with a specialist. His fever's high, and his heart's not right. It's an unusual case, you see."

"You don't suppose there's any truth in what he says," faltered Gwinnett.

"Hardly," said the doctor, drily. "Things don't come about in life so dramatically. It is easily accounted for. You say your friend has been morbid and depressed for a time. The excitement of the parade, with all the subconscious memories it induced, has been too much for him. He has caught this child's name—the last stranger he met—and has dressed it up in a personality. Depend upon it, that's all. If he persists in the morning— Well, we'll have to prove to him he's mistaken. He'll sleep for some hours, now; but I'll be in before he wakes."

There were few hours of darkness left, for the sun soon touched the golden Diana on the tower opposite; but they seemed endless to the watcher.

The city woke but the man slept on.

Gwinnett was standing by the window with the doctor, listening to the directions, when there came a stir from the bed. How the glad light rushed to his eyes as he heard his name called; for he had feared that waking.

"Here's the doctor, Jim. You've had one of your bad turns; but you've slept and are better."

Jim Smith turned glad, sane eyes upon them. Then he said:

"Yes. I'm better, Walt; but have you seen my wife yet?"

Walton hesitated and looked helplessly at the doctor.

"There, there, my dear sir, it's all right; she'll come by and by."

A little smile came round the corners of the sick man's mouth. He must take the reins himself.

"You think I am delirious, Doctor. Well, I am not. This is a matter in which you cannot meddle. Walton, what time is it? They must have finished breakfast. I want you to go down-stairs and find that boy's father. Tell him I am his father, Francis Trumbull, who was born in the old house, opposite the Green, in 1838; that I am a graduate of Yale, Class of '58; that I married Barbara Sherman in '59, and that I went to the War, in '61, as a captain in the Invincibles."

His voice was low and steady, and carried conviction to one of his hearers. "See him alone, and let him break it to—his mother. Only"—here the excitement which he had bravely kept in check, broke out, in a measure—"only for the sake of Heaven be quick!"

Walton Gwinnett went down the stairs in a maze. While he was listening it had all seemed true, but now he doubted. As he reached the floor below he met the New Haven party just coming out of the elevator. The boy rushed to him, as he stood confused before them. At the sight of them his tale seemed absurd. Yet, there was the black dress of the oldest woman, and he must speak.

"Can I see you a moment alone, Mr. Trumbull?"

The young man turned and faced him, and in one glance every doubt was stilled. Out of all the world this was Jim Smith's son!

The ladies walked on, followed reluctantly by the boy.

The men sat down in the seat by the elevator, and Gwinnett began his story.

In a half-hour he was back in the sick-room. The doctor sat beside his patient.

"She's coming, Jim," he said, hoarsely. "Doctor, it's true."

The doctor went into the other room.

"Do I look very old? Oh Gwinnett, do you think she can love me still?"

For answer Gwinnett brushed the gray hair back from his forehead, and the hot tears fell on his face.

"God bless you, old fellow! Now go out, and let her in!"

UNCLE SAM'S CLOCKS FAR AND NEAR.

The time of day—in other words, what o'clock it is—is a simple matter, well understood and easily comprehended by everybody in a city or in approximately the same locality. But when people are separated, some being to the east or the west of the others, the simplicity of the answer to the question, What time is it? is by no means so apparent.

Indeed, confusion has so often arisen in consequence of the difference between clocks, say, at New York and Chicago, that it has been found decidedly advantageous to divide the United States into time districts, each district differing from the adjoinining one by just one hour of time. The railroad companies were the inaugurators of this admirable system, which business men and finally the government shortly adopted.

Thus in the United States to-day there are Eastern time (corresponding to the 75th meridian of longitude west from Greenwich), Central time (corresponding to the 90th meridian west from Greenwich), mountain time (corresponding to the 120th meridian west from Greenwich).

STANDARD TIME.

Owing to this simple arrangement it therefore follows that when it is high noon in Eastern time at New York, for instance, it is eleven o'clock in Central time at Chicago, 10 o'clock in mountain time at Denver, and 9 o'clock in Western time at San Francisco. This division of time, though not astronomically correct, is sufficiently so for all practical purposes, and one can readily understand how greatly business is thereby facilitated.

For instance, the longitude of the City Hall of New York is 70 deg. 24 sec. west. This converted from arc into time gives four hours 56 minutes 1.6 second. But the time of the clocks in New York and throughout all the Eastern time section or district is five hours from Greenwich, which is the time corresponding to a longitude of 75 deg. west. Since the adoption of standard time, as these times into which the mainland of the United States is divided are called, the dominion of the country has been extended. It now comprises islands in the Atlantic Ocean and islands in the Pacific Ocean. Havana, most people have the idea, lies to the eastward and southward of New York. Instead, it is situated nearly south of Key West, in longitude 82 deg. 21 min. 30 sec. west, or 5 hours, 29 minutes 26 seconds from Greenwich, about midway between Eastern and Central times. Undoubtedly Eastern time will be the time to which the Cuban clocks will eventually be set.

San Juan is situated in longitude 66 deg. 7 min. 28 sec. west. This reduced from arc to time by dividing by 15 gives 4 hours 24 minutes 30 seconds. Here again, perhaps, Eastern time will be adopted when trade between these West India Islands and the ports along the Atlantic seaboard has increased to the great volume which is sure to come with peace and prosperity.

CLOCKS IN THE WEST.

Now for the great West. San Francisco lies 8 hours, 9 minutes and 38 seconds distant in time from Greenwich, though, according to our adopted standard time, it is regarded commercially as only 8 hours distant. Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands, of the United States, is distant by sun time 10 hours, 31 minutes and 36 seconds from Greenwich. It would certainly be more convenient to drop the minutes and seconds and consider the Hawaiian group as a round ten hours distant from Greenwich, or two hours from San Francisco, or five hours from New York.

So far, this question of time has been plain sailing, as the nautical men say. We have been following the sun to the westward, taking our date and day with us, the same with which we started from Greenwich or New York; but after we shove off from the Sandwich group and head for our tight little island of Guam we encounter a difficulty that is decidedly puzzling to the landsman, and even the nautical man has to sit down and work it out.

The difficulty lies in the adding to or dropping from our calendar of an entire day, according as we may be going to the east or to the west of that meridian of longitude called 180 degrees.

THE CLOCKS AT GUAM.

Guam lies in the Pacific Ocean in lodgitude 144 deg. 39 min. 30 sec. east. In time this is 9 hours 38 minutes and 31 seconds east of Greenwich. This means that the sun rises over that island 14 hours, 38 minutes and 38 seconds before that luminary shines over the island of Manhattan.

The common day, often called the civil day, lasts from midnight—to midnight twenty-four hours. In order that the civil day may have the same number or date the world around, the leading nations have agreed to use the date of the days as they begin on the 180th meridian.

THE INTERNATIONAL DATE LINE.

Thus with every place its dates are counted from midnight to midnight, and each day takes the same date as that given to the latest new day on the 180th meridian. We may think of the new date as traveling westward with the midnight. The date is given to each place as soon as the midnight reaches it. When midnight again occurs in the 180th meridian another date begins its journey around the earth.

When vessels cross the 180th meridian they either drop a day or add one to the calendar. As the new date begins on that line a vessel sailing eastward across the line goes out of the area having the new date and must therefore go back a day. Sailing westward the vessel enters the area having a new day, and must therefore add a day to the calendar. Thus, when sailing eastward across the line, Monday is dropped for Sunday; but sailing westward over the line Saturday at once gives place to Sunday. The meridian of 180 degrees, at which all new civil days begin, is called the "international date line."

MANILA TIME.

As a matter of fact the international date line is an arbitrary line and does not conform strictly to the 180th meridian. Many islands in the Pacific, notably those which are in close commercial touch with Australia use East Greenwich time, though geographically they lie in west longitude. But our far off Pacific possessions are not of these.

Guam, then, is well ahead of New York—more than fourteen and a half hours—so that when it is noon at the city of New York it is 2 o'clock, 38 minutes and 31 seconds in the morning of the next day at Guam. Our celebrating of Washington's Birthday will be a day that is past at Guam. While New Yorkers will be honoring the father of the original United States the inhabitants of Guam will be soundly sleeping off the effects of their jollification, it being after 2 o'clock in the morning of February 23 with them.

Manila presents a similar phase of the question of day and date. Our newest and maybe our richest possession is situated in longitude 120 deg. 58 min. 3 sec. east. In other words it lies 8 hours, 14 minutes and 7 seconds east of Greenwich, and since New York is 5 hours from Greenwich Manila is 13 hours, 14 minutes and 7 seconds distant from the Herald Building.

GAINING A DAY.

But it must be borne in mind that Manila is east of New York, and that, therefore, the sun rises over that troubled land where Dewey and Otis have put up such a brave fight 13 hours before it lights up New York. Hence, when it is high noon with us it is after 1 o'clock at night of the next day in the Philippines. It will be midnight with them when it is midday with us.

Going east or west around the world there is in reality no real gain or loss of a day; otherwise, as Captain Leckey, in his "Wrinkles in Navigation," remarks, a man by continually sailing round east about might be considered, from the frequent repetitions of a day which it entailed, to have lived longer than another who stopped at home. Such a traveler, however, only appears to have stolen a march on time, because as he has gone east he has "met the sun in its coming," and thus shortened the length of his days by the amount of longitude traversed. Had the man remained stationary his days would always have contained just the 24 hours.

WHEN PA SHAVES.

When Sunday mornin' comes around
My pa hangs up his strop,
An' takes his razor out an' makes
It go c'flop! c'flop!
An' then he gits his mug an' brush
An' yells t' me, "Behave!"
I tell y'u, things is mighty still—
When pa begins t' shave.

Then pa he stirs his brush around
An' makes the soap-suds fly;
An' sometimes when he stirs too hard
He gits some in his eye.
I tel y'u, but it's funny then
To see pa stamp an' rave;
But y'u musn't git ketched laffin—
When pa begins t' shave!

Th' hired man he dassent talk,
An' even ma's afeard,
An' y'u can hear the razor click
A cuttin' through pa's beard!
An' then my Uncle Bill he laffs,
An' says, "Gosh! John, you're brave;"
An' pa he swears, an' ma jest smiles—
When pa begins t' shave.

When pa gits done a-shavin' of
His face, he turns around
An' Uncle Bill he says, "Why, John,
Y'ur chin looks like plowed ground!"
An' then he laffs—jest laffs an' laffs,
But I got t' behave,
Cos things 's apt t' happen quick—
When pa begins t' shave!

FOR THE SEASON OF 1899.

Now that spring is here and the time for moving and house cleaning has arrived, you will want some

FURNITURE AND CARPETS

and perhaps some little things of importance for the house to make the home comfortable and everyone happy, and the best and cheapest place to make your purchases is the place where you can get the most and best goods for your money, and that place is the Large Furniture, Carpet and Housefurnishing Stores, of the well known and reliable firm of

THEO. DERR & SON,

who are ready and willing to make everything right that is not just as represented, and no questions asked. Some months ago we decided and advertised that we were going to close out our Furniture Business, which we fully intended to do, but through the persuasion of some of our many friends we have been persuaded to continue, which we will do with the handsomest and cheapest line of Furniture and Carpets ever before offered by us or anyone else. Our Furniture line will be found on the second floor of our large and beautiful store building. Our Queensware and Housefurnishing Department will be found on the first floor of our Large Store, where everything is fresh and bright, and new attractions will be added daily. Our Carpet Department is in the room formerly used for our Queensware and Housefurnishing Department. We were too hampered in that Department and were compelled to make the change we have, which we think is a grand improvement. Our doors are open to everyone whether you want to buy or not. Everybody welcome. The poor man is as welcome as the rich and everyone will be treated alike. We show no favors to anyone. One man's money is as good as another to us. An early call from one and all is earnestly solicited.
