the injured member.

"Fell off that old bicycle. It ain't fit for a fellow of my age to ride. I do hope, Ellen, when you marry Mr. Dillard, he'll give me a decent wheel."

Ellen drew herself up.

"James," she said tragically, "how dare you speak to me like that? Here, take your lotion, and don't you ever mention that subject to me again."

"I don't know what is the matter with me," she thought, as she returned to the sitting room. "This has been a horrid day"—and there were tears in her eyes.

She was more than surprised as she entered the room to find Mr. Wheeler awaiting her. He was standing by the mantel, and looked taller and more grave than usual, she thought.

"I was just wondering what to do," he said. "I was told I would find you here."

How glad she was to see him! She was amazed at her own gladness. She explained her absence, and then touched lightly and with unusual animation and charm on a variety of subjects.

"You seem to be in a happy mood this afternoon," he remarked gloomily.

"Do I?" she returned. "You don't."

"No," he said slowly, "I am not. I have come to say good by."

"Good by?" she echoed. "Are you going away?"

"I am not coming here any more."

There was silence for a moment. Then she said with dignity.

"Have I offended you in any way?"

"You understand well enough," he answered bitterly. "Do you suppose that I do not know what every one else knows—that you are going to marry Dillard?"

Ellen rose and faced him steadily.

"I am going to do nothing of the kind," she said, with distinctness. Then she went over to the window and lowered the sash.

"You are not! he repeated. Why?"

"Because I don't care to," she answered, drumming lightly on the pane.

He went over and stood by her side.

"Is there any one you would marry?" he asked earnestly.

"Yes," she said, after a pause, "there is."

"Ellen," he asked huskily, "am I the man?"

"You are the man," she said.

GOATS FOR MILKING.

In a recent number of Lady Warwick's new journal, the "addition of the milch goat to the stock of the small holding" is strongly advocated by Mr. F. Bate, who suggests the management of Nanny as a suitable occupation for women. "Until recently," remarks Mr. Bate, "the value of the goat was hardly realized in England. A great deal has been done, however, during the last 25 years by the British Goat Society to improve the breed of goats and to make their value known." Without in the very least reflecting upon the accuracy of this statement, it may safely be remarked, says another agricultural writer, that there are, even to-day, very few districts where the value of the goat is realized, or where the British Goat Society has been so much as heard of in the ordinary way. The more is the pity, for, as Mr. Bate shows in his excellent article—which does not in the least overstate the case—the claims of the goat to a greater sphere of usefulness than has up to the present been accorded it in England, are many and strong. As Mr. Bate puts the case: "The goat is a clean, healthy, docile and affectionate animal, suitable to be cared for by women. It yields in remunerative quantities delicious milk, which is much richer in solids than cow's milk, giving a percentage of butter fat from two to three times greater than an average cow, and, perhaps from the smallness of its fat particles—much more digestible and nourishing, and better suited to infants and invalids."

A good milch goat, as Mr. Bate goes on to say, only costs to purchase about a quarter or a fifth as much as a moderately good cow; it costs to feed about a sixth as much; and, as already stated, its milk is far richer than that of the cow. A further quality which should help to win Nanny much favor at the present juncture is her resistibility to tuberculosis. She is practically proof against that disease. The widespread impression that the goat is an evil-smelling animal, and that her milk emits a strong and unpleasant flaver, is stated by Mr. Bate to be an erroneous one. The objectionable smell is restricted to Billy; and provided Nanny is restrained from feeding on pungent herbs or bark, her milk will be as sweet as that of any cow. Readers are advised to keep only goats of the best breeds, and cross-bred Toggenburg and English are recommended as "excellent milkers and easy to obtain at moderate prices."

SATURDAY NIGHT.

There is a restful sound about the mention of Saturday night.

To the rich man who lolls about all the week, trying to make the slow hours pass some how, it may mean much; but to the man, woman or child who works ten hours a day for six days out of the seven it has a significance. It means rest.

It means going to bed without setting the alarm clock so that it will ring out and get the house astir at five o'clock.

To the busy toilers in our factories and workshops, Saturday night comes as a blessed relief—a break in a weary monotony.

The loose ends of the week's work are gathered up. The housewife sets the goodly array of eatables in the cupboard, and thinks "To-morrow I will rest."

She draws her basket of mending toward her with inward satisfaction, and darns the stockings and sews on the buttons with a sense of relief. She will rest to-morrow!

The children will put away their toys and their school books, and gather round the fire to read the weekly papers and look at the pictures.

Saturday night! No more work for thirty-six hours! Thirty-six hours of sixty minutes each!

No more money making, no fretting, no business cares, no trying to make books balance—nothing but rest!

The husband is tired, he has worked hard.

He has earned the rest which is coming.

He puts on a clean shirt, combs his wet locks, and sits down to the supper which labor has given him the right to eat without killing him with indigestion.

And the way the viands disappear is a sight to maks a dyspeptic howl with envy.

On Saturday night our friends drop in and talk over the news, and tell us what is in the papers and compare notes on the weather, and give us a detailed history of the way Aunt Maria had the toothache and what the dentist said, and how uncle John had an attack of influenza, and what cured him.

And we urge them to stay longer, for it is Saturday night, we tell them; and we walk down to the gate with them, remark on the beauty of the night, and wonder if it will rain to-morrow.

And we go to bed, tired but happy, and reflect that we can lie in bed till we really have rested, for to-morrow is Sunday, and Sunday is the day of rest.

SCORED LAST.

There was only one vacant seat in the rear car of the "L" train when the woman with the resolute look and pointed nose came in.

It was by the side of a man with a soiled face and watery eyes, but she took it.

After sitting a few minutes in silence she elevated her chin, looked from side to side and sniffed audibly.

A few moments later she repeated the operation, looking with unspeakable severity at the man by her side.

Apparently she had located the disturbance, whatever it was.

"Beg y'r pardon, ma'am," said the person with the watery eyes, "are you 'h'mpy! h'mph! ing at me?"

"I am, sir!" she replied.

"What's matter, ma'am?"

"I think it's a shame."

"What say, ma'am?"

"I say I think it's a shame for a man like you to come into a car and seat himself among decent people."

"Think 'tis, ma'am?

"I do, sir! You are drunk. You are offensive! I say it's a shame for such a man to thrust himself in among respectable people!"

"Beg y'r pardon, ma'am, but I di'n't thrust myself in here by you. I w's already here w'en you come in."

"If I had a husband like you," she said with concentrated scorn, "I'd give him poison!"

"Mad'm," he rejoined, looking her over with a feeble sort of smile, "'f I had a wife like you I'd take it."

And she elevated her chin some more, but didn't say anything.

The latest advice for keeping eggs comes from a farmer's wife. She takes long stockings, fills them with eggs, ties them and hangs them in the cellar or garret in a current of air. Every week or two she takes the stockings down and hangs them upside down. This is quite an important part of the method. Eggs have been kept sweet for a long time in this manner.

Make sure that however good you may be you have faults; that however dull you may be you can find out what they are, and that however slight they may be, you would better make some patient effort to get quit of them.

Mrs. De Fine—Here's my new bonnet. Isn't it a darling? Only $28! Mr. de Fine—Great snakes! You said bonnets could be bought from $3 up. Mrs. de Fine—Yes, dear. This is one of the "ups."

"ABSOLUTELY NOTHING?"

They had been discussing the earliest age at which children of tender years first babble incoherent words. The doctor had been silent until, by common accord, everyone looked to him to finish the discussion.

"I remember a curious case," he began, dreamily, "which you may believe or not, as you please. I was called in to see a poor child of some four months and found it past all aid.

"'Cannot you do anything for it, doctor?' the mother asked, and I replied, 'Absolutely nothing.' You'll hardly credit the fact that the child looked up in my face and said, 'Absolutely nothing?' It sounds incredible, I know, but it is a fact."

He rose just then and walked away, while the smoking room crowd wondered.

Then one saw it and began reading, and then another muttered something severe. But the doctor had gone.

"Yes," said the editor, as he put his gum brush into the ink bottle and tried to paste on a clipping with his pen, "yes, the great fault of newspaper contributors is carelessness.

"Indeed," he continued, as he dropped the copy he had been writing into the wastebasket and marked "Editorial" across the corner of a poem entitled "An Ode to Death," "contributors are terribly careless.

"You would be surprised," said he, as he clipped out a column of fashion notes and labeled them "Farm," "to see the slipshod writing that comes into the editorial sanctum.

"Misspelled, unpunctuated, written on both sides of the sheet, illegible, ungrammatical stuff. Contributors are terribly careless. They are——"

Just then the office boy came in with that dictatorial and autocratic manner he has, and demanded more copy, and the editor handed him the love letter he had just written to his sweetheart.

"What is the longest day you ever knew?" he asked, when conversation lagged.

"This one," she replied, without even making an effort to conceal a yawn.

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!

I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always their plea. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store, therefore I have no opposition. If you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar on all Wall Papers.

Finest and Cheapest Lines of

WALL PAPER
