rich man like you to give; but we didn't any of us know, when we was judging you that way, what you had slyly hid away in the pocket. I expect Mr. and Mrs. Goodfellow got off to the city, on this train, to get some of the things they've been wanting this many a year. Five hundred dollars was a big thing to them."

The Deacon gave an inarticulate gurgle, and his rubicund face turned to a greenish pallor, as he grasped the gatepost for support. His five hundred dollars gone! He remembered now how carelessly he had left it in the pocket of his old coat. Miss Prissy didn't wait for him to speak, though her black eyes sparkled mischievously as she witnessed the effect of her intelligence. She knew that, if there was one thing the Deacon loved more than his money, it was the applause of his fellow-men, and she had managed so well that he could not recover his money without incurring the scorn and ridicule of his neighbors.

She trotted briskly off, and left him to himself, to get over his anger and grief as best he might. The Deacon was a wise man in his generation, and wise men always make the best of circumstances, so that is what the Deacon did. He realized that he had irretrievably lost the money, so he resolved that no one should ever know it had not been a free gift, and he accepted his neighbors' praises as if he had fully earned them, as well as the earnest gratitude of the minister and his wife. Only the Deacon and Miss Prissy knew it had been a mistake, but they never told the real truth about that Thanksgiving Donation.

A BURNING CLIFF.

The most extraordinary feature of the Arctic regions has now been discovered. It is a burning cliff 2,000 feet in height and 20 miles long, the whole of which is a mass of flames and smoke. This amazing discovery has been made by Professor A. J. Stone, of the American Museum of Natural History, who recently visited points of the Arctic never before explored. When seen from afar, Professor Stone at first supposed that the great cloud of smoke issuing from the burning cliff was a coming storm. He ordered his party into a storm camp, where all went to sleep. The following morning the cloud was still there. Professor Stone then resolved to investigate, and with much labor crossed an ice field, approaching the land as night fell. Then in the darkness it was seen that the party were in the immediate neighborhood of a gigantic conflagration, whose reflection could be seen from afar. Thousands of glowing apertures extended for miles along the coast. They were at varying levels, from the top of the high cliff to almost the bottom. From them the smoke exuded in puffs and in steady streams. The ice fields around reflected the fire from these blazing furnaces of coal, and the hummocks of the ice fields glinted with red and orange fires. Overhead was a great pall of dense black smoke. The smell of burning lignite and sulphur became almost unbearable. At intervals huge chunks of burning coal rolled down the side of the cliff, and far out onto the ice. These glowing masses blackened as they fell and broke into thousands of pieces, scattering their remnants over the ice and marring its purity with a smudge that had attracted Professor Stone's attention when approaching the cliff. When the wind shifted from the land the smoke was dense and breathing became difficult.

As dawn came on the party was able to observe the burning cliff more distinctly. To its great height, almost 2,000 feet, it was afire. From crevices, from the bottom almost to the top, the smoke poured as if from a volcano. Smoke oozed from the soil in puffs, and with great regularity, as from a chimney, from great black crevices which were burning strata of coal. These strata zigzagged their way across the irregular face of the cliff, and were seldom more than four or five inches wide, but in some instances a foot thick. The burning material, while largely composed of lignite, is probably made up of several combustible chemical substances. Owing, however, to the impossibility of climbing the cliff, Professor Stone was unable to ascertain the exact composition of the burning material. The cliffs are high and steep, and cut into pinnacles and chimneys. These chimneys, not being intersected with the inflammable strata, have not burned, and stand out against the glowing background. They are extremely picturesque and convey the same effect as do the Bad Lands of Dakota, except that the latter are not smoke covered and have been created by water erosion, while those in the Arctics have been eaten away by fire.

One of the most remarkable and beautiful features of these miles of burning coast line is the variety of color that they present. Overhead is the pall of dense black smoke; below the blue gleam of the eternal Arctic ice. On the wall of this burning cliff is a variety of rich, warm tones, from cream to a deep, rich red, all the shades of terra cotta. Between the strata of burning coal are layers of clay. The constant burning of the many seams of lignite in the face of the cliff has created sufficient heat to turn the clay into terra cotta. As this has burned it has tumbled down the face of the cliff in vari-colored streams until it assumes the appearance of a wall down which ribbons of very warm and rich color have fallen. During the thousands of years this wall has probably been burning it has been seriously undermined, and this has produced the great chimneys or towers of rock which stand isolated from the mass, but streaked and strained by the fires that have surrounded it.

On top of this burning cliff the country extends far inland in a level plain devoid of snow and ice. This would indicate that the burning coal strata extended for a great distance horizontally below the surface. In places the surface is so hot that a man cannot walk upon it. The smoke and heat exude through the porous soil. It might be asked how the fires could burn so far below the surface and behind the face of the cliff. The hot air from the burning lignite rises, it is supposed, through the earth and creates a vacuum, which is filled by a rush through the crevices left by the burned out coal. The burning seams extend for an unknown distance beneath the surface.

For several days Professor Stone's party followed the walls of burning lignite along the coast of Franklin Bay, and only left them at the Constable River, also discovered by this expedition. From where the burning wall was first discovered until its end, at Constable River, is exactly twenty miles. In this length millions of tons of coal are being consumed every few days, and the heat and energy generated in them is incalculable, but in the frozen North, surrounded by perpetual snow and ice, these fires are useless and lost.

Where did this coal which perpetually burns in the Arctics come from? The seams are very narrow and imperfect. Professor Stone has an idea that they were formed by great beds of seaweed or kelp. The Mackenzie River, which flows through this country, is one of the greatest on the continent. It is from one to two miles broad and very deep. Its tributaries are all great streams—the Athabasca, the Liard and the Peace. It drains an immense lake system, in which many of the lakes are very large, notably the Great Bear and Great Slave, each of which is 150 miles wide. Its small feeders extend to as far as Winnipeg, almost on the northern borders of the United States. In the far past millions of tons of driftwood went down these streams and into the great sea that washes North America's most northerly coast, and were cast back upon its shores. This is probably where the coal that is burning on the shore of Franklin Bay came from. Or was it left on the shores in the days of the mammoth, thousands of years ago, when the vegetation of the Arctics was as luxuriant as that of the equator of to-day?

The Century MAGAZINE

"THE LEADING PERIODICAL OF THE WORLD" WILL MAKE 1901

A Year of Romance.

Besides a great program of illustrated articles,—a superb panorama of the Rhine,—John Bach McMaster's group of articles on Daniel Webster,—color-pictures, etc., etc., The Century will present, beginning with November, 1900, the first issue of the new volume,

Short Novels and Complete Stories by:

"The Helmet of Navarre"

A great novel, full of life, adventure and action, the scene laid in France three hundred years ago, began in the August, 1900, Century, and will continue for several months in 1901. Critics everywhere are enthusiastic over the opening chapters of this remarkable story. "The author's fame is apparently established with this, her maiden effort," says the Boston Transcript. The Critic calls it "A remarkable performance."

FREE. New subscribers to The Century Magazine who begin with the number for November, 1900, will receive free of charge the three previous numbers, August, September and October, containing the first chapters of "The Helmet of Navarre," or, if these numbers are entirely exhausted at the time of subscribing, they will receive a pamphlet containing all of the chapters of "The Helmet of Navarre," contained in the three numbers.

Ask for the free numbers when subscribing. $4.00 a year.

SOMETHING NEW FOR GIRLS and BOYS.

During the past year "St. Nicholas" Magazine, which has been for nearly thirty years the leading children's monthly magazine of the world (and now the only one), has introduced several new departments which have been extremely attractive and have greatly increased the circulation. One of these is

"NATURE AND SCIENCE."

"Don't bother me—I'm too busy" is too often the remark from a grown-up person to a child who really wants to know. The editor of "Nature and Science" gives careful attention to every question asked by his young readers, and "We will write to St. Nicholas, about it" has become the motto of the department, which contains interesting short articles, beautifully illustrated, telling of four-footed animals, birds, insects, water animals, plants, and whatever pertains to Nature.

"ST. NICHOLAS LEAGUE" is an organization of those who read the magazine (whether subscribers or not), without dues, and it offers prizes each month for the best drawings, photographs, poems, stories, puzzles and puzzle answers. Some of the work sent in by young folks shows surprising talent.

No one who does not see "St. Nicholas" can realize what an interesting magazine it is, and how exquisitely it is illustrated; it is a surprise to young and old. Of literature it contains the choicest, and in art it has never been surpassed by any grown folks' periodical. The new volume begins with November, 1900, and the subscription price is $3.00 a year. If there are children in your home, you can hardly afford to be without it.

BOYS AND GIRLS

who read this advertisement and who wish to find out more about The St. Nicholas League and its system of monthly prizes may address, without cost, The St. Nicholas League, Union Square, New York.

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold?

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.

MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very troublesome cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am, Truly yours,
EDWARD LYNCH.

For Sale by all Druggists and Merchants in the Country. PRICE 25 CENTS. feb-24-4t

WANTED.

Having bought the Smallwood Creamery, of Mr. E. B. Arnold, I wish to say to the farmers of the community that I am prepared to handle 10,000 lbs. of Milk daily, and will pay the highest market price therefor, on or before the 15th of each month.

I ask the co-operation of the farmers. I know, from twelve years experience, that I can do you more good than you can have done for your dairy product in any other way. I would be glad to have any of the farmers call to see me to acquaint them with the business. Will furnish cans at wholesale price.
