THE WHISTLING BOY.

When the curtains of night, 'tween the dark and the light,
Drop down at the set of the sun,
And the toilers who roam to the loved ones come home,
As they pass by my window is one
Whose coming I mark, for the song of the lark
As it joyously soars in the sky,
Is no dearer to me than the notes glad and free,
Of the boy who goes whistling by.

If a sense of unrest settles over my breast,
And my spirit is clouded with care,
It all flies away if he happens to stray
Past my window a-whistling an air.
And I never shall know how much gladness I owe
To this joy of the ear and the eye,
But I'm sure I'm in debt for much pleasure I get
To the boy who goes whistling by.

And this music of his, how much better it is
Than to burden his life with a frown,
For the toiler who sings to his purpose brings
A hope his endeavor to crown.
And whenever I hear his glad notes, full and clear,
I say to myself, I will try
To make all of life with a joy to be rife,
Like the boy who goes whistling by.

Select Story.

CHILI SAUCE.

How Barstow Brown and Elvira Richards came Together.

From the Chicago Tribune.

The household art is the only dower
I can bring save myself to him I wed.
Can you find the roof and earn the flour?
Then I can make home and sweet white bread!

—Harper's.

The last scarlet bar of the gorgeous autumn sunset was fading out behind the tall poplars along Turkey creek when Barstow Brown's creaking old farm wagon turned the corner of the road which led to his lonely and ill kept home.

"There's the light a-burnin already in Mis' Elviry Richards' window," he commented. "It does get dark awful early nights now. Seems like hern's the cleanest kep an the cheerfulest lamp in the hull township."

And indeed it did seem to illuminate with its friendly radiance the little one story house by the roadside. It looked like a beacon—a star. It made Farmer Brown think in admiring but unformulated fashion of a steadfast love—pure, unwavering, brilliant. It attracted him. It drew him—the worn and harrassed body and soul of him. Unconsciously he tightened the reins. But it was not until the plodding horses stood still in response that he wondered whether he might venture in and what excuse he could give for his visit.

Suddenly he lifted his head and sniffed—one, twice. Then he hurriedly twisted the reins around the whipstock and clambered down from the high seat. Swiftly, soundlessly, excuse and encouragement had come to him—in the guise of an odor at that.

"Chili sauce! If she ain't a-makin chili sauce!" He was hurrying up the short path to the front door, at which he knocked. "I'll tell her I want the receipt for Susie Reilly to make some by. That's the ticket! Oh, howdy, Mis' Richards! I was goin home from mill an the nicest smell come a-floatin down the road! Seemed 's if I was back in mother's again, an she was puttin up chili sauce." He sighed and moistened his lips at the recollection. "So I thought I'd come in and find how you make it. Our ripe tomatoes aint all gone yet. Maybe Susie Reilly could make a quart or so!"

Forty placid and benignant summers had passed over the brown head of Elvira Richards, but where was the girl along Turkey creek who carried herself with more grace and dignity, and what matron could boast such a fresh complexion and bright eyes as she?

"To be sure!" she cried heartily. "You come right in, Mr. Brown." She drew forward the best rocking chair, with the Battenberg tidies on the entreating red plush arms.

"'Tisn't much I need make, livin alone as I do, but a good storeroom is a fine thing to fall back on. You'd need a lot in your house, I'm thinkin. I'll give you the receipt with pleasure, and a jar to take home for Susie to taste by. How does she get on, Mr. Brown?"

Barstow Brown looked around the bright little room, at the shining glass lamp with the red flannel wick, which stood behind the row of freshly potted geranium slips in the recessed window, then back at the plump, white aproned figure opposite.

"Not too well, Mis' Richards. She's kind of shiftless. It comes natural to some folks to be shiftless. Seems like the work allus keeps a bit ahead of her. Seems like she can no more catch up with it than—than she could with a cottontail. But she means well. Most shiftless folks allus means well. I got to be movin." He rose reluctantly. "The young ones, they'll be
