89c—Skirts always sold for $1.00, or more, made of fine Muslin with ruffle of embroidery or lace.

$1.25—Very handsome Petticoats of fine Muslin, cut very full and wide, all beautifully trimmed.

CHEMISE.

38c—Of fine Muslin, generously cut and trimmed with lace or embroidery.

69c—Fine Muslin, with crissinise trimming of fine inserting and embroidery.

Embroideries In The Expansion Sale.

The second week shall be better than the first. Seems as though the deeper we get into the lots the better and prettier we find them, while the prices are low as ever.

The 5c Lot—Comprises pretty Edgeings and Insertions worth up to 10c yard. Some are very neat and narrow, while others are wider and more showy.

The 10c Lot.—A hundred pieces or more of the nicest Embroideries we have ever seen for such a price. Their values range up to 20c. Many of them are as much as 2 or 3 inches wide, at 10c yard.

The 12½c Lot—Consists of handsome goods worth up to 25c, in Cambric and Nainsook Embroidery and Inserting, beautiful new goods and extremely cheap at 12½c yard.

The 19c Lot.—Embroideries worth up to 40c per yard, width up to 6 inches, truly the richest goods ever shown at so small a price. Nainsook and Cambric.

The 25c Lot.—Some goods in this lot would be cheap at 50c, but the price is only half, wide Cambric Flouncings and lovely Nainsook Embroideries, all new choice patterns, at 25c.

The 5c Laces.—Torchon and Medici Laces and Insertions, for 5c yard., that are worth double the price. Come get what you need.

DERR & LAMBERD, WESTMINSTER.

The First Great Bargain Sale

Of the new century is now in progress here. Values such as we offer you are only found within these stores.

On Monday, January 21st, the workmen will begin alterations here. Hence the goods must be moved. The attractions on our second floor will be particularly attractive as here the mechanics will begin work first and the goods must be gotten out of the way as well as the dust.

NOTICE: All goods on this floor must go in a jiffy. The prices are only about half their value. Be prompt!

Second Floor Bargains.

Women's Clothing. Most Interesting.

Our entire stock of LADIES' COATS has been divided into four lots as follows:

$4.98, $6.98, $9.98, $11.98.

Select Story.

A WOMAN'S LOVE.

The Baron was seated beside Miss Cartwright at Mrs. Broadhurst's dinner party. While engaged in conversation he suddenly said: "What a nice looking waiter that is—the tall, well built fellow with blond hair."

"I don't think I am interested in servants," she returned indifferently. "I never notice one until he has done something gauche, from which I suffer." She did not even try to discover which servant had won the baron's attention.

"This one will do nothing awkward I feel sure," said Baron Weyderlinck. "He has the most charming manners, and there isn't a man sitting at the table who can compare with him for distinction."

"Baron! You are sitting at the table."

"If you do not care to look at a very charming man because he is a waiter, I shall not force you to. So you need not seek to divert me by seductive compliments. But I wish you would look at his hands—so white, and such models of a man's hands! His nails are exquisitely manicured. And he has shaved off his mustache lately".

"Do you know him?"

The question came with an involuntary interest, which piqued his curiosity still more.

"I never saw him before in my life, and, of course, one does not 'hear of' waiters except at intelligence offices. But the skin of his upper lip is whiter than that of the rest of the face, which is a little browned for a house servant."

"I thought he might be a foreign prince in reduced circumstances seeking his fortune in America," replied Miss Cartwright innocently. "If you discover he is wearing a wig, I promise to look at him, but otherwise it seems to me as if we had exhausted him as a conversational topic. Talk to me about something interesting, baron."

"Certainly. The last thing in the world I would willingly do is to bore you."

Their remarks had been in an undertone, for the distinguished waiter was across from them. This fact and the gallant air with which the baron made the remark just quoted gave an air of confidential intimacy to their conversation. When Baron Weyderlinck looked at the interesting waiter again, he was amused to discover a look of indignation on his handsome face. When he caught the baron's eyes, he gave him a long insolent stare, which set him to thinking about him. "What a land of liberty America is!"

His interest was not lessened. Everything the waiter did had such facile grace—except one.

He was pouring champagne into a woman's glass when his eye chanced to catch that of Miss Cartwright. He overflowed the glass!

Two days later Miss Cartwright, having finished her dinner early at the Waldorf-Astoria, instructed the man at the office who had to look after the cards of visitors that she would be in the little reception room at the left of the Thirty-third street entrance and retired there to await some possible caller. It is used but little and was almost empty now, though the more attractive Turkish room across the corridor was filled with a drifting stream of people.

She sat down and waited with evident impatience, for she would rise, walk about the room, then seat herself again, tap the floor with her foot and dart a glance every now and
