again at the entrance to the room. Ah! She had time to assume a calm, complacent expression.

"Good evening, Miss Cartwright. I am charmed to see you looking so well. It has seemed a long time since last August and Bar Harbor."

"Good evening. Will you sit down, please?"

The erect elegant young man drew a chair near her and sat down. He was in evening clothes. Miss Cartwright's heart sank a little.

"It's awfully good of you to see me so soon," he remarked, with an ingratiating smile. After our last meeting you must have felt the need of explanation. Wasn't it an immense joke?"

"I suppose my sense of humor is defective," murmured Miss Cartwrigt. "I quite fail to grasp the jocose side of it; but, of course, it was not so dreadful after I had the explanation. Tom told it all very movingly, and though I still think it very unnecessary, I understand it better than before."

"Tom?" said the young man, with surprised interrogation.

"Yes; my cousin, Tom Blakely. When I asked him for your address and told him how we had met—that is, where I had seen you the other night—he explained all the painful circumstances. Of course I need not tell you how deeply I sympathize with you. That is the reason why I asked you to call to-night.

"So Blakely is your cousin?"

"Yes."

"Pray, tell me what he said. You did not get my note, then?"

"No. I have not heard from you. What did you say!"

"Tell me first what your cousin said. He may have told you the facts much better than I did."

"He said that you had suffered the most awful and sudden loss of all your money; that you resolutely refused to accept assistance from any one and vowed you would do the only thing you knew how until you could make enough to do something better. Of course I admired the sturdy independence of this stand, though I think it is terrible! But I have sent for you in the hope that I may be of some assistance, sinse you have taken such a quixotic attitude."

The young fellow followed her with the keenest attention, although he had pulled out his handkerchief and was constrained to hide his feelings at times in its folds.

"Noble soul! He has certainly explained far better than I did in my brief note. So you know the worst now, Miss Cartwright. Do tell me what you had in mind in sending for me?"

"First," said Miss Cartwright, speaking very rapidly and getting very red, "we surely were such good friends last summer that it would be perfectly right for you to let me lend you some money. You know I really have to look out for ways of investing it, and I will ask you a good interest on it and all that—just straight business, you know."

"That I cannot do, my dear Miss Cartwright, though it is tremendously nice of you to think of it."

"Then, since you are so hatefully proud, here is the other plan. It certainly is more promising than the situation—the position you are now in."

"The situation I am now in," echoed the young man.

"Yes. A servant! Why do you force me to say it?"

"Oh, that! Oh, yes. Of course. Go on, please."

"My aunt, Mrs. Parsons, a wealthy widow, is here with me, or, rather, I am here with her. We mean to stay a month or six weeks in New York and then go abroad for an indefinite time; just drift about, you know, without any fixed plan. She very rightly thinks we shall be ever so much more comfortable if we have a courier. Would you be willing to go with us as one? We, of course, would be the benefited party."

"By Jove, you are the right sort of a girl!" exclaimed the young fellow. "But, my dear Miss Cartwright"—she gave a slight start at the familiar expletive—"though I am immensely grateful for your consideration, there is one objection to my accepting the position. The courier would be in love with his employer!"

"Really, I—my aunt made this suggestion seriously, and it isn't very nice of you to treat it with such flippancy."

"It is not flippancy, believe me, Miss Cartwright. I thought when we met again I should ask you to marry me, because I love you with my whole heart. But we kave met, and you look upon me, poor and engaged in an honest, if lowly, form of bread-winning. How could I ask you to share that lot, even if I had assurance of your regard for me? Yet to be with you and not betray my devotion at every turn would be impossible."

"Your poverty does not count that!" And Miss Cartwright snapped her fingers in the air. "But I have carried my head pretty high and I should hate to have my enemies, or my friends either, say that I married a waiter! Oh, if you had cared for me as you say, you would not have put yourself in a position to make such a hideous difficulty!"

"Tell me, Miss Cartwright, Adela, if I can come to you some time when this period in my career is forgotten and can prove to you that it can never give you a pang. Do you love me and will you then accept me for your husband?"

"Yes. And if you will promise to drop it and go abroad at once we can be married there, and by the time we come back it will be forgotten."

"Then I consider myself engaged as courier for life to Mrs. George Sandvoordt!" he exclaimed gayly. "Excuse me one moment."

"Where are you going, George?" she asked anxiously.

"To secure proof that my servitude, except to you, does not amount to that!" And he snapped his fingers with gay energy.

In a moment he had returned and handed her a letter, which she read eagerly:

"My dear Miss Cartwright:—You made me lose a wager last night at Mrs. Broadhurst's dinner. I had bet a club friend that a gentleman could take a servant's place and fulfill its duties perfectly. Our contention waxed so hot that I agreed to put my belief to the test. So Blakely managed to get me a chance as extra man at this dinner at Mrs. Broadhurst's, whom I did not know at all and where I was not likely to meet a soul I knew. And there were you, of all beings! When you looked at me with that proud, pained, yet friendly expression, I filled a woman's glass with champagne until it overflowed and so lost my wager. Let me come to see you soon and explain more fully how I was servant for one evening to Mrs. Broadhurst, but am always your's most devotedly.

"GEORGE SANDVOORDT."

She looked up with a beaming face and stretched forth her hand.

"Then you will take me as your courier for life, Adela?"

She nodded, and, as there was no one in sight, they indulged in a brief but ardent embrace.

"Oh, George!" she sighed. "What a relief your poverty did not lead you to such lengths! By the way, don't you want me to draw a check for you, my poor boy?" There was a pucker in her brow and a pathetic look in her face.

He shook with laughter, although he had to give her another quick embrace. "You dear little girl!" he cried, still laughing. I am as rich as I ever was in my life—richer, for I have you."

"But Tom Blakely told—"

"A corking lie, Adela, for which I thank him, since it has proved that you loved me, poor and in servitude, enough to take me for myself."

"But he made me suffer needlessly, and I will make him pay for it. Oh, George, there is Baron Weyderlinck! Call him, please. I want to tell him how I agree with him about you—to congratulate him on his unerring judgment on thoroughbreds."

LIFE A CENTURY AGO.

Changes That Have Taken Place Within One Hundred Years.

(From the Memphis Commercial Appeal.)

One hundred years ago a man could not take a ride on a steamboat.

He could not go from Washington to New York in a few hours.

He had never seen an electric light or dreamed of an electric car.

He could not send a telegram.

He couldn't talk through the telephone, and he had never heard of the hello girl.

He could not ride a bicycle.

He could not call in a stenographer and dictate a letter.

He had never received a typewritten communication.

He had never heard of the germ theory or worried over bacilli and bacteria.

He never looked pleasant before a photographer or had his picture taken.

He never heard a phonograph talk or saw a kinetoscope turn out a prize fight.

He never saw through a Webster's Unabridged Dictionary with the aid of a Roentgen ray.

He had never taken a ride in an elevator.

He had never imagined such a thing as a typesetting machine or a typewriter.

He had never used anything but a wooden plow.

He had never seen his wife using a sewing machine.

He had never struck a match on his trousers or anything else.

He couldn't take an anaesthetic and have his leg cut off without feeling it.

He had never purchased a 10-cent magazine which would have been regarded as a miracle of art.

He could not buy a paper for a cent and learn everything that had happened the day before all over the world.

He had never seen a mechanical reaper or a self-binder harvester.

He had never crossed an iron bridge.

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!

I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always their plea. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store, therefore I have no opposition. Is you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar on all Wall Papers.

Finest and Cheapest Lines of WALL PAPER

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold?

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.

MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very troublesome cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am, Truly yours,

EDWARD LYNCH.

For Sale by all Druggists and Merchants in the Country. PRICE 25 CENTS. feb-24-4t

WANTED.

Having bought the Smallwood Creamery, of Mr. E. B. Arnold, I wish to say to the farmers of the community that I am prepared to handle 10,000 lbs. of Milk daily, and will pay the highest market price therefor, on or before the 15th of each month.

I ask the co-operation of the farmers. I know, from twelve years experience, that I can do you more good than you can have done for your dairy product in any other way. I would be glad to have any of the farmers call to see me to acquaint them with the business. Will furnish cans at wholesale price.
