IN SCHOOL DAYS.

Still sits the schoolhouse by the road,
A ragged beggar sunning;
Around it still the sumachs grow,
And blackberry vines are running.

Within, the master's desk is seen,
Deep scarred by raps official;
The warping floor, the battered seats,
The jack-knife's carved initial;

The charcoal frescos on its wall;
Its door's worn sill, betraying
The feet that, creeping slow to school,
Went storming out to playing!

Long years ago a winter sun
Shone over it at setting;
Lit up its western window-panes,
And low eaves' icy fretting.

It touched the tangled golden curls,
And brown eyes full of grieving,
Of one who still her steps delayed
When all the school were leaving.

For near her stood the little boy,
Her childish favor singled;
His cap pulled low upon a face
Where pride and shame were mingled.

Pushing with restless feet the snow
To right and left he lingered—
As restlessly her tiny hands
The blue-checked apron fingered.

He saw her lift her eyes; he felt
The soft hand's light caressing,
And heard the tremble of her voice,
As if a fault confessing.

"I'm sorry that I spelt the word;
I hate to go above you,
Because"—the brown eyes lower fell—
"Because, you see, I love you!"

Still memory to a gray-haired man
That sweet child-face is showing.
Dear girl! the grasses on her grave
Have forty years been growing.

He lives to learn, in life's hard school,
How few who pass above him
Lament their triumph and his loss,
Like her—because they love him.

—John G. Whittier.

LETTER FROM SHAMOKIN, No. 4.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

On our last trip to the mines we went "down the shaft." The difference between the slope and shaft is that the cars are attached to a cable on the slope and hauled up an incline varying in degrees as the strata of rocks vary. All shafts however are sunk perpendicular. This one at the "Excelsior" is 462 feet deep and has a system of cables which admit of the raising of one "cage" as the other falls. The cylinder in the engine house, about which the cable revolves is 12 feet in diameter and is run so swiftly that one is barely able to count the revolutions.

Before making the descent accompanied by Boss Huber, his son Daniel, of the Central College of Pennsylvania; Mr. Wm. Malick, of Dickinson College, and my brother, we visited the engine room. The engineer was given the tip that we were "greenies" and asked to let us down easy. He assured us that he would, and amid the exchange of winks we left to be "let down easy." The cage has a partial top to protect from falling objects, and a bottom to keep the objects from falling through, but has no sides. The word was given, "step in gentlemen." We did so. The next thing we heard was "alright." There was a sudden tremor, and then a giddy sensation of falling into a bottomless pit, followed by a sensation of soaring rapidly upward through the air, and we were at the bottom. Time twelve seconds. Distance almost that of the height of Washington's Monument. The first words that we heard was: "yes, they are safe, but they haven't caught their breath yet." It was the guard below speaking to the engineer through the 'phone and the laugh was on us. But we were out for what we were getting—experience. During the descent, so swiftly is it made, the greeny feels that the cage is leaving him. When near the bottom the engineer applies the brake and the sudden stoppage together with the onrush of air to fill the vacuum caused by the fleeing cage, causes the sensation of rising.

This is the deepest shaft in these parts, but not nearly as deep as others in other parts of the state. One shaft is being sunk in the upper coal regions which will be 1800 feet deep. When down, with miner's lamps we "did" the mines. Our tramp covered several miles of gangway during which time we observed all the kinds of mining and timbering in use there. As the coal is dug out timbers must be placed in the mines to keep the overhanging rocks from falling. There are four methods of timbering in general use in the mines here, viz.: single timber, post and bar, single prop and collar, and double timber. Where the single timber is used a heavy timber is placed at right angle to the dip on the upper side of the gangway to support the overhanging rocks. This is used when the rock is solid and the inclination considerable. In post and bar, timbering is arranged with a heavy timber surmounted with a lighter cross piece. This is used as the first except where the inclination is less. The prop and collar method is used where there is a great inclination and when the top rock is not secure. A heavy post is placed on the lower side surmounted by a heavy cross timber which is notched into the rock on the upper side. Double timber consists of two props and a cross bar. This method is used where the dip is almost vertical and where great weight is to be supported. Over all timbers are strewn smaller timbers to hold up the the loose pieces of coal or stone. This is called lagging.

The sump collects a great deal of water from the gang ways. This water is pumped to the "jig house" and used in washing the dirt out of the smaller sized coal. It is also utilized to make steam, either to run the machinery or to be condensed again for drinking purposes for man and beast (a problem of no small importance to the operator.)
