"Toiler, Canst Thou Dream?"

Lulu Mitchel, in March Century.

Toiler, canst thou dream,
At the seam, at the plow?
Higher heritage than kings
Hast thou.

Canst thou read, in star or weed,
Answer to thy heart's deep cry?
Gold, nor gem, nor Love's own crown
So satisfy.

Toiler, canst thou wait,
Through the storm-black hour, clate,
Ruler of thy recreant will,
Dominant of Fate?

Toiler, canst thou trust?
From the dust, stand, and tell,
Though the tears come streaming, all—
All is well!

Select Story.

DAY IN THE LIFE OF A WOMAN PHYSICIAN.

BY EDITH SESSIONS TUPPER.

Dr. Jane Stuart ran over her morning's mail with a mingled frown and smile. There were letters from all sorts and conditions of people, invitations to dinner, confidential notes, letters from cranks and a message from a woman reporter asking for an interview.

Dr. Jane was a personage. She was physical director of a tremendously smart woman's athletic club. She had a chair in a woman's college. She possessed a large practice. She had written several pamphlets on germs, bacteria, microbes and other unpleasant things. Moreover, she was a charming woman, socially sought and popular in her circle.

But she was frightfully overworked. Sometimes the exquisite machinery of her nerves got awry, and then Dr. Jane wished she could steal away from everything and rest. She was living constantly at high pressure and was a typical woman of the new school.

Dr. Jane answered such communications as were of moment, accepted an invitation to dine at a smart house, gave the newspaper woman an appointment for 5:30 that afternoon and then set forth on her round of morning calls.

As she came down the steps of her home she bowed to her fellow practitioner, Dr. John Treadwell, who lived just across the street and was about entering his carriage.

Dr. John uncovered and swept her a magnificent salutation.

Dr. Jane blushed.

She would have been furious with any one who dared to tell her that her face grew rosy. She would not have admitted so feminine a weakness. Still she blushed.

Now, the cause of that blush was this: Dr. John was in love with Dr. Jane and had frankly told her so and asked her to marry him. But the offer had been accompanied by a condition. Dr. Jane must abandon her practice. "I do not want my wife running about and killing herself with work, as you are doing. Moreover, I want a companion, not a fellow practitioner."

Now, Dr. Jane was in love with Dr. John, but she refused to abandon her career and told him so.

They had a fine quarrel, and Dr. Jane told Dr. John she hated him, which was not polite. Moreover, it was not true and he knew it.

Just now these two medical experts were treating each other with that exaggerated courtesy which warring lovers always affect.

"Horrid man!" said Dr. Jane to herself. "He can keep a carriage, while I have to trudge around on foot. How handsome he looks! I should like to ki—to kill him—odious wretch!"

"Dear, spunky little woman," thought Dr. John. "She looks completely fagged. She is killing herself by inches, but she won't give in, obstinate minx! O these women and their careers!"

Dr. John drove away in his brand new carriage, his dusky coachman grinning at his side. Dr. Jane walked a block and hailed a passing car.

She rang the bell of a handsome up town house and was promptly shown up stairs. The room she entered was darkened. On a luxurious divan, amid a forest of silken pillows, lay a slim woman in a ravishing negligee. She had once been a great beauty, but her face with its haggard expression, drawn lines and faded, lackluster eyes, told a story of misery.
