fine trees, mellow distance, and a blue thread of a river crossing the foreground. I shall see then if he has clothed his stones with the right kind of moss, and tinted the petals of his blossoms correctly."

It was the first time I had known her to show so much interest. I was encouraged. I watched her as she deliberately completed her toilet; arranged the rich sable furs, drew on the delicate gloves, took up the faintly perfumed handkerchief and the pretty muff, and said quietly:

"Now I am ready."

"It was very thoughtful in thee," she said, as we walked down town—using her pretty Quaker speech, as she sometimes did in confidential moments—"to screen me from comment and inquiry by withholding my story from thy friends. Sometimes, indeed, I feel that I am lending myself to deception; but dost not thou think it an innocent one?"

"Certainly," I replied. "I think it perfectly justifiable under the circumstances."

"And yet I have thought that, if it were discovered, it might lend an unpleasant seeming to our conduct. Dost thou think there is danger?"

We had reached the studio and were entering. It was a quaint-looking place, differing little from others of its kind, except in the air of comfort, of "at homeness," if we may coin such an expression. At this moment my friend Raymond was engaged, so we amused ourselves, for a time, with the paintings hung on the walls, and some half finished sketches.

Yet, while thus entertaining Aurelia, I was not so much admiring the pictures as studying, by side glances, the strange lady with whom Raymond was talking. She was a very striking person, and the influence by which my eyes seemed perpetually to turn to her, from whatever station I assumed, reminded me of the ancient arts of fascination and witchery, and I wondered if she exerted the same power over Raymond, who was stooping over the chair in which she sat to catch her murmured tones. Hardly—Raymond was a man of many experiences and much penetration.

Finally she rose, shook out her dainty flounces with a silken touch, all the while that her full, expressive eyes were turned upon Raymond, and, giving him her hand in a warm, impressive manner that was full of art, made her adieus, and sailed slowly down the room.

As she passed I noticed that her eye fell upon Aurelia. There was a quick, and, it seemed to me, a malignant glance of recognition, a slight and haughty stoop of the proud form, and she passed on with an added touch in her manner. I looked at Aurelia; her usually pale face was overspread with a faint flush and her breath seemed to come and go between her parted lips in pants like that of a frightened deer. Raymond was approaching, however, and I touched her arm to recall her to self-command.

Raymond led us at once to the centre of the room, where, in the full light of a sky window, stood an easel covered with a cloth. The covering was carefully drawn aside and the next moment there was revealed to us simply the head of a little girl of three years. It was exquisite in outline and coloring, and the expression was life-like, thoughtful, serious, tender, almost beyond words, yet childlike withal. In her hand she held an Easter lily. As I turned to Aurelia to ask her opinion, I saw that her eyes were suffused with tears, and in another instant I heard her softly murmuring:

"My child, my child."

Raymond was gazing upon her with a deeply penetrating gaze. I saw at once that our little ruse was, with him at least, blown to the winds.

"Am I mistaken," he asked of me in a whisper, as Aurelia's preoccupation shielded her from inquiry, "or is this Mrs. Desmond, the widow of my old friend Harry?"

But Aurelia's quick ear caught the sound. She blushed crimson, and extending her hand with the artlessness of a child, exclaimed:

"You knew my husband? Ah, then you will be the friend of his wife and refrain from exposing her to the sharp comments of the world. No one knows my history here but Mrs. Earl."

Raymond readily assured her of his discretion, and thinking to divert her attention from the embarrassing question, asked her opinion of the picture.

"It is perfect. So like my own little Daisy, too. Ah, Mr. Raymond, I should have thought only a mother's heart could have nourished such an inspiration.

Raymond blushed at the rather embarrassing compliment.

"We artists," he said, see beauty in all its forms."

That visit to Raymond's studio proved the turning point in Aurelia's history. Raymond came often afterward to see us, and in his presence she was a poet once more. Already I began to build the most georgeous air-castles for my two friends, rosy as the hues of sunset.

I had never inquired of Aurelia concerning her acquaintance with the lady whom we had met in Raymond's studio, thinking that it might, perhaps be an unpleasant topic. But, sitting one day in her room, a sketch dropped from her portfolio. My eye rested upon it only a moment—for she immediately stooped and replaced it—but its characteristic was not to be readily apprehended. It was a mere outline of flowing robes, heavy fur mantle, nodding plumes and dainty muff; but the face was not that of the handsome woman we had seen at Raymond's but the ugly and distorted head of a serpent, while dimly through the length of the figure I could trace the scaly serpentine evolutions and stinging tail which formed the proper continuation of that odious head. It was a strange conception to come from the brain of my magnanimous and high-souled friend.

"Dost thou see her—dost thou not see her?" exclaimed Aurelia one day, running into my room with eyes distended and hair flowing like a spirit.

I followed the direction of her eager hand, and looking out, saw that same elegant lady entering the gate.

A minute later the servant brought up her card.

Aurelia would not go down.

"Mrs. Desmond desires to be excused this morning," I said, coolly, to my caller.

"Indeed!" replied Mrs. Mountjoy. "I regret it extremely, I assure you. It is some years since I have met Mrs. Desmond, and it would give me a great pleasure to renew her acquaintance."

Mrs. Mountjoy was rising to go. I did not care to have any more to say to her than possible, and probably divining my wishes she continued moving toward the door and was soon gone.

I confess I was more than surprised at such importunity from Mrs. Harold Mountjoy. Her husband was old, wealthy, and gentle; her position as a social leader, at present an enviable one, however unenviably attained. Why she should specially care unless from some sinister motive to renew her acquaintance with Aurelia, I did not at first see clearly. But in an instant I remembered her earnest and impressive manner, as she bade Raymond adieu, that morning, and a great light illumined my mind. I was more than ever determined that Mrs. Mountjoy should not succeed in this pernicious scheme of hers.

Raymond called that evening. Aurelia happened to be upstairs at the time, writing a letter, so that I employed the wished-for opportunity of a tete-a-tete with him.

"A friend of yours called here today," I said, "who it seems, is also an old acquaintance of Aurelia's—Mrs. Mountjoy. She is an interesting character; do tell me about her."

Raymond smiled the peculiar smile of a man of the world.

"Yes she and Aurelia were rivals once, I think," said he.

"Do you know, Raymond," said I, "that I suspect that woman of designs upon you."

Raymond looked embarassed.

"I was afraid of that, too, at one time, my dear friend, but Aurelia's noble countenance and pure, childlike heart awoke me to my danger," said he, briefly. "Her face is a perpetual joy!"

Raymond's declaration which followed a short time after the above conversation, took Aurelia quite by surprise. I was not disappointed—nor, I think, was he—that she gave him an unqualified refusal.

"I am willing to be, nay, I am proud to be his friend, his sister even, but I have been a wife once, and it is over—I cannot be again," said Aurelia, in talking over the affair with me. "He says Easter and springtime are coming with fresh hopes," she faltered.

It was nearly spring, and Aurelia returned to her quiet home. Raymond came often to see me, and I knew that he had not forgotten Aurelia. Mr. Harold Mountjoy died that spring and left his widow free in the exercise of her peculiar talents. She frequented Raymond's studio more than ever, but to no effect. I passed her once or twice on the street, and her glance at me was malignant.

Aurelia wrote frequently, and I saw by her letters that her home was not to her what it had once been.

"I am haunted," she wrote to me in the early autumn. "I have a want which nothing satisfies.

"I have told you more than I meant to, but not more than my heart often compels me to think," she wrote once.

Of course, I had no right to tell Raymond all this, but I did say to him, one day.

"You are looking worn. Why don't you spend some of these glorious October days in the country? Run down with my love to Aurelia, and an invitation to come back and spend the winter with me."

"I'll go," he said. "It will be the best medicine for me."

When he came back, his countenance was radiant with joy.

"Are you well paid for going?" I questioned him.

"Amply. She would give me no promise, but I left a ring, upon her finger. "Ah! she is a jewel!"

When Easter came again, I went down to Aurelia's wedding.

CALVARY.

Under an Eastern sky,
Amid a rabble's cry,
A Man went forth to die
For me.

Thorn-crowned His blessed head,
Blood-stained His every tread;
Cross-laden, on He sped,
For me.

Pierced glow His hands and feet,
Three hours o'er Him beat
Fierce rays of noon-tide heat
For me.

Thus wert Thou made all mine:
Lord, make me wholly Thine:
Grant grace and strength divine
To me

In thought and word and deed
Thy will to do. Oh, lead
My soul, e'en though it bleed,

MAYDOLE'S HAMMER.

(Benson's Plaster is Pain's Master.)

When Maydole was told that he made "a pretty good hammer," he said, "No, I don't make a 'pretty good hammer,' I make the best hammer that ever was made."

Every carpenter who saw a Maydole hammer wanted one. It was of the best material, perfectly balanced, and the head never flew off. Hammers were divided into two classes—1st, Maydole's; 2d, all the rest.

Plasters are separated by the same line of cleavage; 1st, Benson's Porous Plaster; 2d, all the rest. When, for rheumatic pain, a cold, a cough, kidney trouble or any other disease or ailment that may be treated externally, you ask for a plaster, any honest, reputable druggist will give you a Benson's. He knows it is incomparably the best, and he assumes that you know it too. As the name of Maydole stood for hammers the name of Benson stands for plasters—the "real thing." All the medicinal potencies that are valuable in a plaster are in Benson's. Capsicum, Strengthening and Belladonna plasters are out of date.

An army of physicians and druggists, and millions of the people, have written of Benson's Plasters as a remedy to be trusted.

Benson's Plasters have fifty-five highest awards. Accept no substitute.

For sale by all druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States, on receipt of 25c. each.

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold?

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.

MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very troublesome cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am, Truly yours,
EDWARD LYNCH.

WANTED.

Having bought the Smallwood Creamery, of Mr. E. B. Arnold, I wish to say to the farmers of the community that I am prepared to handle 10,000 lbs. of Milk daily, and will pay the highest market price therefor, on or before the 15th of each month.

I ask the co-operation of the farmers. I know, from twelve years experience, that I can do you more good than you can have done for your dairy product in any other way. I would be glad to have any of the farmers call to see me to acquaint them with the business. Will furnish cans at wholesale price.

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!

I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always their plea. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store, therefore I have no opposition. Is you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar on all Wall Papers.

Finest and Cheapest Lines of WALL PAPER
