CORN KING.

Full Limit of Production Reached.

From Louisville Courier Journal.

Chicago, June 8.—Is the present range of corn values the result of successful speculative manipulation or a legitimate but ephemeral advance due to temporary scarcity, or is it a permanent result of changed economic conditions? asks B. W. Snow, in the Chicago Record Herald. Now that the speculation deal is over, it is interesting to know whether Mr. Phillips is a cause or a result, whether any action of his raised corn prices from the 30s to the 40s, or whether he was simply foresighted enough or fortunate enough to be the first to take speculative advantage of a radical permanent change in the relations between supply and demand for our greatest cereal. In the past no farm product has been more erratic in its price fluctuations, one year selling above wheat in open market, as in 1894, and serving as fuel on Western farms the next year.

During the last five years there has been an enormous permanent increase in the consumption of corn, and the result is that consumption has not only definitely overtaken production, but has absorbed the surplus of earlier years of large production. A few years ago a crop of 2,000,000,000 bushels provided a surplus to carry over for use in the occasional years which must inevitably come when less than a normal crop is gathered.

NO SURPLUS IN SIGHT.

Under present conditions there is no surplus to carry over, nor will there be until there shall be a further heavy increase in production, an increase which is not possible except by a radical disturbance of the present relations of one of our crops to another in the distribution of acreage. For two years we have been living from hand to mouth, and we have reached a position where any crop shortage, say a crop even only slightly under 2,000,000,000 bushels, would result in insufficient corn to meet requirements.

The principal factors in this increased consumption may be readily examined. We are now killing 10,000,000 hogs each year more than we killed in 1895. This means a demand that must be filled for 200,000,000 bushels more corn each year. The man who raises the corn also raises the hogs, and whatever price corn may be bringing in the market the price of meat keeps pace, so that the farmer who puts his corn into pork always realizes more than the market price for his grain. One bushel of corn makes twelve pounds of pork, so that at present prices of hogs this corn brings the producer sixty-five cents per bushel.

We are marketing now 500,000 cattle a year more than in 1895, and this represents another 50,000,000 bushels permanent increase in feeding requirements of corn. In addition the past five years have brought about a change in the matter of range production of beef. Formerly cattle were sold for slaughter direct from the grass. Now a large and rapid increase in percentage of range cattle are finished on corn at feeding stations. This change, which is becoming more and more general, creates a permanent and increasing annual demand for another large amount of corn.

GLUCOSE AND STARCH.

The glucose and starch manufacturers have become important factors inside the last ten years, and since 1895 the consumption of corn in this form of manufacture has increased by 50,000,000 bushels a year.

A few years ago we only exported corn when the price was so low as to make its production unprofitable. Now the foreign demand takes an increasing amount each year, almost without regard to price. In five years our exports have increased by more than 100,000,000 bushels, and this increase has been at prices that earlier in the decade would have almost prohibited any exports.

Another line of consumption which cannot be definitely measured, but which is increasing rapidly, is the use of corn for human food. There are in the country now some thirty-five mills devoted to the manufacture of corn products on a commercial scale, most of them new or enlarged within the last five years. The amount of corn required by these mills is rapidly increasing and they are already factors to be considered in corn distribution. Two mills in a central Illinois town now consume the surplus corn grown within a radius of fifty miles in the very heart of the best part of the corn belt, paying prices that the Chicago market cannot equal. Similar mills for the manufacture of corn food products are being built in Europe, notably in Belgium, and we will undoubtedly witness a great increase in the food use of corn in the next few years, as we have at home in the past few.

INCREASE IN DEMAND.

The increase in the annual demand for corn within the last five years, so far as it can be tabulated, may be presented as follows:

	Bushels.
Increased pork production	200,000,000
Increased beef production	50,000,000
Increased glucose and starch use	50,000,000
Increased exports	100,000,000
Total	400,000,000

How is this increasing demand being met? Up to the present time solely from the accumulated surplus from 2,000,000,000-bushel crops in the years when 1,750,000,000 measured our total consuming capacity, and when a 2,000,000,000-bushel crop meant 13 to 15 per cent corn on the farms of the Missouri valley. We have not increased our production. In 1900 we grew 2,105,103,000 bushels; in 1895, 2,151,000,000 bushels, and so long ago as 1889 2,112,292,000 bushels. It was these big crops prior to 1898 that furnished the corn for this increased consumption in recent years, but this store is now gone, and with a present consumption running ahead of production we are face to face with a permanently changed economic condition. The future will see a new range of corn values and that range will depend entirely upon the new conditions. Old precedents are of no use now that there has been a permanent shifting of the relations between supply and demand.

HIGHER LEVEL OF PRICES.

Under these conditions prices must remain permanently upon a much higher level than heretofore or one of two things must be brought about—a decrease in consumption or a material increase in corn production. It is not easy to see how either alternative can be worked out. The great bulk of our domestic consumption is in the production of meat. The 40,000,000 hogs slaughtered annually represent roundly 800,000,000 bushels of corn; the 6,000,000 beef cattle demand nearly 500,000,000 bushels. The amount fed to farm work animals grows larger each year with the increased acreage of arable land.

For none of these demands is it economically possible to substitute any other grain on an important scale. For feed of urban work animals oats is already the main grain reliance, so that little saving is possible in this direction. The growing manufacture both of commercial and food products from corn will be but little affected by price conditions, as they meet a demand that cannot be filled by any other cereal. Practically, then, our export trade offers the last chance for curtailing the annual distribution. This trade, however, is already accustomed to the present range of values, and now takes two bushels where it took one five years ago at a price ten cents a bushel lower.

QUESTION NARROWS DOWN.

Present consumption being of a permanent character at anything like the present range of values, the question narrows down to the possibility of increased production. Our rate of yield is gradually increasing with improved agricultural practice, but this increment is too slow to offer any solution of the problem. If our crop is to be radically increased, it must be through an enlargement of the acreage. The commercial corn belt is limited to a definite territory in seven states, and, broadly speaking, every acre of this belt is already in farming use. The day of new farming lands is forever past. There can be no great enlargement of corn acreage except at the expense of some other crop area, and in the well settled system of crop rotation which is becoming the dominant characteristic of agriculture in the corn belt such changes are not practicable and could not be permanent without violently affecting the price relations between the various cereals. Broadly speaking, the American corn belt has reached the limit of its expansion and crop enlargement hereafter must come in the way of more bushels produced on each acre.

In American agriculture the corn grower is the first producer to reach a position where production becomes practically fixed and demand exceeds supply. He has reached the position of an agricultural monopolist, and collectively he can now fix the price of his product. Conditions of supply and demand have so changed that the present or even a higher range of values will permanently rule the corn trade, fluctuating of course with changes in crop results, but averaging in the 40s and 50s instead of the 20s and 30s.

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold?

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.

MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very troublesome cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am, Truly yours,

EDWARD LYNCH.

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!

I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always their plea. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store, therefore I have no opposition. Is you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar on all Wall Papers.

Finest and Cheapest Lines of WALL PAPER
