Attempted Assassination of President McKinley.

Shot by Leon Czolgosz, of Cleveland, Ohio.

The Assailant an Anarchist.

A Native of Detroit, Michigan.

HIS FATHER A POLE.

The Whole Country Moved to Profound Feeling by the Foul Crime.

Universal Horror Felt by the American People. The Civilized World Shares in Abhorrence of the Awful Deed.

The Shot Fired While the President was Holding a Reception at the Pan-American Exposition.

William McKinley, President of the United States, was shot twice while holding a reception in the Temple of Music on the Pan-American Exposition grounds, Buffalo, at 4.12 o'clock, on Friday, September 6th.

One bullet took effect in the right breast and the other in the abdomen. The first wound was not of a serious nature and the bullet was extracted. The second bullet went through the President's stomach, and it is supposed, lodged in the muscles of the back. The rents in the stomach were sewed up, but the second bullet has not been extracted.

The assassin is Leon Czolgosz. He was born in Detroit, Mich., and went to Buffalo from Cleveland. He is an anarchist.

The President after the shooting was taken to the Emergency Hospital, on the Exposition grounds, and later to the residence of John G. Milburn, president of the Exposition.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 6.—Five minutes before the President was shot the crowd was in the most cheerful humor in the Temple of Music. The police had found no trouble of any kind, and when the President's carriage, containing, besides the Chief Executive, President John G. Milburn, of the Pan-American Exposition, and private Secretary George B. Cortelyou, drove up to the side entrance to the temple it was met by a mighty salute of cheers and applause.

The interior of the building had been arranged for the reception. From the main entrance, which opens to the southeast from the temple into the wide esplanade, where thousands had gathered, an aisle had been made through the rows of seats in the building to a point near the center. This aisle was about eight feet wide and turned near the center to the southwest door of the temple, so that there was a passage dividing the south part of the structure into a right angle.

It was so arranged that the people who would shake hands with the President would enter at the southeast door, meet the President in the center and then pass on out at the southwest door. Where the aisle made the curve in the center of the building the corner had been decorated with tall palms and green plants, so the President stood under a bower. Both sides of the long aisle were covered with continuous strips of purple bunting.

Through this passage the people who would meet the President must pass. When all was ready a wavering line of people, who had been squeezed against the outside of the door for hours, began to wend its way up through the lines of soldiers and police to the place where the President stood. An old man with silver white hair was the first to reach the President, and on his shoulder the little girl he carried received a warm salutation.

Fully half of the people who passed the President were women and children. To every child the President bent over, shook hands warmly and said some kind words, so as to make the young heart glad. As each person passed he or she was viewed critically by the secret service men. Hands were watched, faces and actions noted.

Far down the line a man of unusual aspect appeared taking his turn in the line. He was short, heavy, dark, and beneath a heavy, dark mustache was a pair of straight bloodless lips. Under the black brows gleamed a pair of glistening black eyes.

He was picked out at once as a suspicious person and when he reached Foster the secret service man held a hand on him until he had gotten to the President and clasped the Chief Executive's hand. Ireland was equally alert and the slightest move on the part of this man, who is supposed to have been an accomplice, would have been checked by the officers.

Immediately following this man was the President's assailant. He was a rather tall, boyish-looking fellow, apparently 25 years old.

The Secret Service men noted that about his right hand was wrapped a handkerchief. As he carried the hand uplifted, as if supported by a sling under his coat, the officers believed his hand was injured, and especially as he extended his left hand across the right so as to shake hands with the President. It was noticed that the person who was in front of the assassin held back, apparently to shield the young man, so that it was necessary for Ireland to push him on.

As the youth extended his left hand he, quick as a flash, as if trained by long practice, whipped out his right hand—the one which held the pistol. Before any one knew what was transpiring two shots rang out, one following the other after the briefest portion of a second.

For the first moment there was an awful hush. Then there was pandemonium. The Chief Executive, it was known, had been shot.

The President drew his right hand quickly to his chest, raised his head and his eyes rolled. He swerved a moment, reeled and was caught in the arms of Secretary Cortelyou, to his right.

The President was carried first one way, then a step in another direction. The excitement was so sudden that for a moment no one knew what to do. Finally someone advised carrying him inside the purple edge of the aisle and seating him on one of the chairs.

The bunting was in a solid piece. No one had time to produce a knife had he been able to think of such a thing. A couple of men tore the benches aside and trampled the bunting down, while Mr. Milburn and Secretary Cortelyou half carried the President over the line and into the passage way leading to the stage, which had not been used.

The President was able to walk a little, but was leaning heavily on his escorts. In passing over the bunting his foot caught and for a moment he stumbled. A reporter extricated his foot, and the President was carried to a seat, where a half dozen men stood by and fanned him vigorously. Quick calls were sent for doctors and for the ambulance.

While seated for a moment Secretary Cortelyou leaned over the President and inquired:

"Do you feel much pain?"

White and trembling, the President slipped his hand into the opening of his shirt front near the heart and said:

"This wound pains greatly."

As the President withdrew his hand the first and second fingers were covered with blood. He looked at them, his hand dropped to his side, and he became fainter. His head dropped heavily to his chest and those about him turned away.

During this pathetic scene, while tears were filling the eyes of those about the President, who realized their utter powerlessness to help him, Minister Aspiroz, of Mexico, broke through the little crowd excitedly and awakened the faint into which the President had sunk by dramatically exclaiming in English:

"Oh, My God, Mr. President, are you shot?"

While the excited diplomat was being restrained from caressing the Executive and falling at his feet, the President replied gasping between each word:

"Yes——I—believe—I—am."

ASPIRATION.

—:o:—

Still must I climb if I would rest;
The bird soars upward to its nest;
The young leaf on the treetop high
Cradles itself against the sky.

I cannot in the valley stay:
The great horizons stretch away:
The very cliffs that wall me round
Are ladders unto higher ground.

And heaven draws near as I ascend:
The breeze invites, the stars befriend:
All things are beckoning to the best,
I climb to Thee, O God, for rest.

A POINT OF HONOR.

—:o:—

The Dilemma of a Lover.

BY E. BECKFORD.

From the St. Louis Republican.

Framed in the oaken porch of the old Ankerdine mansion a girl stood with a thick wrap across her shoulders, glancing to right and left with a slight shiver and hesitating on the threshold.

"You're confoundedly anxious, madam," snarled her father's voice behind her. "I opine an ardent lover's journey will not be accelerated by your tramping about in the cold."

Miss Ankerdine made no reply, but daintily collecting with one small hand a mass of skirt that would have puzzled a man to grasp in two large ones, threaded a way around flower beds and bushes to another part of the garden where a former owner had constructed a small and deep artificial pond, now skinned thinly over and reflecting the stars like a mirror. It was spanned by a rustic bridge, fragile and worm bitten. From it on a fine day miles of open country could be scanned across the fields and dingles to where the Solent smiled, a blue perpendicular shimmer against the duller background of the Wight. The highroad was just discernible in patches, where no hedge trammeled its boundary, but only at rare intervals before it plunged into a dip and disappeared.

Two years away and his ship paid off to day! It would not be many hours before her lover's horse pounded along its famous course.

For famous it was. Trafalgar was yet to be fought, and few days closed without a detachment of soldiers swinging past, coaches flashing by crowded in and out with men whose trade was war, returned marines with a cargo of prize money and intoxicants pursuing their jovial way or a successful press gang hurrying to the sea.

Millie Ankerdine's eyes danced as she leaned over the bridge in an eager
